OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it .... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

.... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, JULY 5, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 18th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 16th June; and from Calcutta to the 16th June.

THE introduction of the Charitable Endowments Trust Bill was the only business before the Legislative Council at the meeting on the 13th of June.

THE Viceroy may possibly visit Nahun en route to the plains at the close of the hot weather, and will be afforded an opportunity of shooting his first tiger.

SIR EDWARD BRADFORD is likely to accompany Prince Albert Victor to India. One or more officers from the Viceroy's Staff will probably be added to the Prince's suite during his tour.

MR. R. CROSTHWAITE, Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, has reached Simla, and joined the Legislative Council. After officiating for Mr. Mackenzie as Chief Comissioner for two and a-half months he will return to Simla early in October, when the Central Provinces Bills go through the Select Committee stage before being finally passed.

SIR GEORGE WHITE has postponed his visit to Simla for a short time, owing to an accident which has injured his arm.

COLONEL A. R. BADCOCK, Commissary-General, intends taking three months' leave to England in the autumn.

A YEAR'S extension of service to Colonel Ommanney, Commissioner of Peshawar, will be granted, the Government of India agreeing with the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab as to its desirability. The main ground for the extension is the paucity of officers in the Punjab, but the excellent services rendered by Colonel Ommanney on the frontier have also been taken into consideration.

COLONEL F. BAILEY officiates for Mr. Ribbentrop, Inspector-General of Forests, during the latter's absence on leave. Colonel Bailey will arrive in Simla the first week in August, and take over charge about the end of that month.

MR. P. V. LUKE, C.I.E., Telegraph Department, will, on return from leave, be posted to Madras as Superintendent.

COLONEL ATTAULLA KHAN, the British Agent at the Court of the Amir, is about to retire and settle down in his native town of Wazirabad, in the Gujranwalla district.

THE Maharaja of Benares died on June 13. His Highness, who had been in failing health for some time past, was taken very ill on the night previous, and expired early the succeeding morning.

MR. JUSTICE NANABHAI HARIDAS, of the Bombay High Court, who had been ill for a considerable time, died at Surat on June 14.

NEWS has been received at Pondicherry that Monsieur Richaud, late Governor-General of Indo-China and formerly Governor of the French Establishments in India, died at sea when travelling between Singapore and Colombo. Deceased was buried at sea. The cause of death is attributed to heat apoplexy.

CAPTAIN E. A. RUSSELL, R.A., Aide-de-Camp to the Madras Commander-in-Chief, was killed by a fall from his horse at Ootacamund on Friday evening, June 14th.

LIEUT. STOEHR, R.E., met with a fatal gun accident when in camp about twenty-four miles from Kaladunda.

THREE powerful Molien-pui Chiefs of the Lushai country have come in to the Political Officer, Mr. Murray, at Fort Langleh. They undertake to inform him of all movements among the hostile tribes, and to admit him to their country, which has been hitherto closed to Europeans. This will greatly simplify next season's operations.

THE issues of salt in India for the last month or two have been particularly good, and the general financial prospects are satisfactory.

THE Government of India consider the report made by Sir Guilford Molesworth and Colonel C. J. Smith on the projected East Coast Railway so favourable that it is intended to make a complete survey of the proposed line next cold weather. The Madras Government has given strong support to the scheme, and offer to pay the cost of the survey out of their provincial revenues.

SOME seventeen lakhs of rupees are to be expended during the current financial year on the main line of the North-Western Railway and its frontier extensions, in connection with the mobilisation scheme. New sidings will be laid down, and more crossing stations arranged for, in order to meet the heavy traffic inseparable from the movement of large bodies of troops and great quanties of supplies.

THE Bengal Ironworks, near Burrakur, which are at present under the Government of India, will shortly be worked by an English company with large capital, whose project is about being brought out in London. The company are likely to obtain what is practically a permanent lease of the property.

A DESPATCH from home, drawing attention to the question asked in Parliament about Mr. Phillips' connection with the Calcutta Review has been received by the Government of India. It will be forwarded to the Bengal Government with an inquiry as to whether the rules have been observed. Lord Cross has merely acted according to routine in the case.

THE meteorological authorities anticipate that the Bombay monsoon this year will give normal rainfall over the Peninsula generally.

MR. J. D. INVERARITY, barrister of Bombay, and his brother, a visitor from Shanghai, shot fourteen tigers, five bears, and five panthers, during a sporting expedition in the Central Provinces.

THE evidence that has been collected for submission to the Secretary of State is overwhelming as to the mischief done by the repeal of the C. D. Acts.

OBITUARY.—Captain W. George, 2nd Q.O. B.L.I., at Burma.

THE Pioneer doubts Captain Streatfield's appointment to succeed Lord William Beresford, as the post of the Military Secretary can only be held by Lieutenant-Colonels.

THE Jhelum Valley Road into Kashmir will be open to Baramula by May 1 next year, says the Lahore paper; at least Messrs. Spedding and Co. have signed a contract to that effect. This is rather an improvement on the estimate of five years given some months ago. The change is due to the insistence of the British Resident. It will work a wonderful transformation in the country when travellers will be able to drive in in two days from Murree.

NOTES.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that the Government of India is considering the details of a proposed measure for enlarging the Legislative Councils. A plan of campaign in the Lushai country for the next cold season, with the object of opening communication between the Chittagong frontier and Burmah, is also engaging attention.

IT is said that the telegram which the Maharajah of Kashmir sent to the Viceroy, asking his Excellency to invite him to Simla and shoot him, owed its origin to one Gopinath, the editor of a vernacular paper called Akbar-i-Am, into whose hands the Maharajah had put his case. The Anglo-Indian press and the respectable portion of the native press fully approve of the action taken by the Government of India with reference to Kashmir, urging that British intervention was necessary in order to save the country from being irretrievably ruined by the folly or wickedness of the Maharajah and his evil counsellors.

THE step which the Government of India has now taken with the merciful view of saving the beautiful valley and its inhabitants from further decadence and oppression, will naturally excite the virtuous indignation of the gentleman who has constituted himself member for India and mouthpiece of the seditious grievance-mongers in that country—Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, but it is a step which should have been taken years ago. The misrule and oppression which have been a curse upon the unhappy people of the Kashmir State have been tolerated too long by the Indian Government, simply because the courage to do a bold deed that good might come, was wanting. The first stroke of a vigorous policy has now been made, and it is to be hoped that it will be boldly followed up, notwithstanding the Bradlaugh and Besant protests.

THE philanthropists in the House of Commons who interfere, whenever opportunity offers, with the executive functions of the Government of India, succeeded in getting the repeal of a certain Act which that Government had enforced for the preservation of the health of the British soldier in that country. What has been the effect of what has been justly described "as the shrieking sentimentalism of the old women of both sexes," through whose outcry the Act was repealed? The effect has been so disastrous upon the troops, that an official despatch from the Indian Government is about to be sent home, it is said, to the Secretary of State on the subject.

THE leading journal of Western India assures the public that "the simple effect of the repeal of the Act has been that, whereas during the operation of the measure, the troops remained fairly healthy—remarkably healthy for the tropics—there are to-day not two men out of five who are so. A number equivalent to an entire brigade is now completely disabled, and the condition of the main body of men is getting gradually worse and worse." When it is considered what the value of every British soldier in India is, not merely in a pecuniary sense, but as a safeguard of the Empire, this statement is alarming enough. Our contemporary adds:—"It has been quite evident for a long time past that the inevitable 'something' would have to be done, and that speedily. Now that the old women and faddists have had their turn, and have a good deal more than decimated our army, why not go back to common sense?" Why not? Because old women and faddists never do so.

THOSE grandmotherly people are likely to have another Indian grievance to make capital out of. The Anglo-Indian press is complaining that the discipline and labour in Indian prisons are not sufficiently severe to deter natives from committing crimes. We read that "Habituals," or jail birds, to use another term, figure so prominently in Indian prison statistics, that the conviction is irresistibly borne home to the mind that these men seem rather to enjoy their imprisonment than otherwise. It is undeniable that a moderate amount of sedentary labour when accompanied by a sufficiency of food and a comfortable lodging is no hardship at all to the easy-going Oriental vagabond. The labour exacted is in every way agreeable—so agreeable, indeed, that the fellows gladly and deliberately at the first opportunity return to jail for another spell of good living and easy work."

HERE is the voluntary testimony of an Eurasian gentleman who voluntarily writes to a Presidency newspaper, stating that "he speaks with the authority derived from five years of prison life" in India. He gives it "as his humble and unhesitating opinion, founded upon personal experience and observation, that the manner in which prisoners are treated in Indian jails is not deterrent, but rather an encouragement to crime. The hard labour, so called, is a farce, the food is ample and excellent, the accommodation superb." Such a description must make an Irish patriot who objects to prison discipline under the Irish Crimes Act regret that he has not the advantage of breaking the law in the jurisdiction of the paternal British Government in India.

STATEMENTS as to Sir David Barbour, or anyone else, representing India at the International Monetary Conference must be wholly premature, asserts the Pioneer, the Secretary of State not having yet opened the matter to the Government of India. Of course no better representative of the country's interests in the great issues that will be at stake at Paris could be found than the present Finance Minister, to whose influence the good result of the Silver Commission was so largely due; but at the same time it would be a very unusual step to remove a member of Council on deputation, and as such is not at all likely to have been adopted at a moment's notice.

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE has given a distinct contradiction to the statement that he intends to resign his seat for North Kensington. He merely notified to his constituents that at the next general election he thinks that their representative member should be one who can reside all the year amongst them, which Sir Roper cannot. But this does not mean that he intends to abandon his Parliamentary career, which many of his friends would regret his doing.

LORD LANSDOWNE'S coat-of-arms has been set up in the dining-hall of the Viceregal Lodge, at Simla, as the latest addition to a series representing all the Governor-Generals of India from Warren Hastings downward. The series of painted and gilded shields form an interesting feature in the beautiful wainscotted chamber. The new addition was the work of a Calcutta firm, and is a highly creditable production. All the other shields were brought out from England, where they were executed under the supervision of the Royal College of Heralds.

HARDLY had our troops entered Mandalay, when a most important capture was made, more important probably and better known to the world than any dacoit hunt. The hairy family, it may be remembered, was exhibited in Calcutta and Bombay some three years ago, prior to an extended tour throughout the world. They received a very large number of visitors in this city, and were, for the time being, almost a nine day's wonder. They were heard of at various times in England and America, and then seemed to suddenly drop out of the world's ken. Burma has now reclaimed its own, and on the 4th instant a case was instituted in the Rangoon Court between the partners of the capillary speculation in which some amusing statements were made. We are informed the hairy individuals "were received with the utmost cordiality in all the towns they visited." The man attracted any amount of attention from the fair sex, and when in England "A lady of title had expressed a desire to marry him," while in another town "one of the female spectators had kissed him." But the hairy personage was not to be won, and he has returned to his native land free from incumbrances.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 30.

At the last meeting of the Legislative Council a Bill to amend the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act was introduced. Special protection is afforded by the Bill to those ryots who hold villages in farm. A large number of these persons, though not possessing proprietary rights, represent the founders of the villages which they hold, and have spent considerable sums on improvements. Under the existing law they are powerless to resist ejectment or the enhancement of rent. Their incomplete rights will be fully established and protected by the Bill, and those ejected within the last three years will be reinstated.

Very heavy rains have fallen during the week, and some accidents of a rather serious character have resulted. In Bombay two houses occupied by Mahomedan weavers collapsed, two persons being killed and twelve injured. Traffic on the chord line of the East India Railway was interrupted, owing to the destruction by floods of Jyntee bridge. This was a large bridge with several spans of 80-feet Warren girders, and a considerable time must elapse before it can be fully repaired. The disturbance of trade and traffic between Calcutta and the northern provinces by this accident affords a strong argument in support of the Chamber of Commerce's recent appeal to the Government to sanction without delay the opening of an alternative route.

The whole trade of Calcutta has been almost paralysed for the last few days by a general strike of Native bullock-carters, 30,000 in number. They are a poverty stricken class, and at the best of times earn but a bare subsistence. They are forced to pay a very heavy municipal licence. A local firm endeavoured to levy a further fee for private registration, and the carters jumped to the conclusion that this was an endeavour of the Government to impose an increase of taxation. The misunderstanding has, however, been removed, and the strike is over for the time.

The question of leprosy in India is assuming a serious character. It is reported that a brigadier-general has been invalided home for leprosy.

A telegram from Bareilly reports two outbursts by prisoners in court. In one case a prisoner on receiving sentence flung his shoe at the Judge; and in the second case a prisoner after sentence, though handcuffed at the time, succeeded in seizing a stick, and forced his way through the police guard, shouting that he intended to kill the Judge. He was eventually stopped by a villager, and the magistrate increased his sentence by a further term of rigorous imprisonment for two years.

The Bombay Government has issued a resolution censuring the Broach Municipality for remissness in the discharge of its duties.

The President of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce at the half-yearly meeting on Thursday said that the Merchandise Marks Act, when once the initial difficulties had been overcome, would work beneficially for honest traders, and secure them against fraud. The Chamber would probably again address the Government as to the necessity of railway extensions. He did not believe the Government would ignore the Chamber's memorial as to the desirability of utilising more freely the Treasury balance for trade purposes. He approved the proposed reduction in the number of members of the India Council.

The Indian Gazette announces the issue of a new Four per Cent. loan of two crores on the same conditions as those of the loan of 1854. Tenders will be received up to noon on July 30. A loan of two and a-half crores had been anticipated, and it is hoped that this reduction in the amount of the loan indicates improved financial prospects. The existing rates are unaffected.

At a meeting of the Jute Manufacturers' Association on Wednesday it was provisionally agreed that short-time working should be continued for a further period of twelve months from February next. The ten days' working in the fortnight will be reduced to nine days' working from July 4. The Association has no intention of accepting the proposal to form a trust.

A gunpowder factory has exploded at Bhopal, twenty-four Natives being killed and fifteen wounded.

A lecturer delivered an address on Wednesday in Bombay, under the auspices of the Society for the Preservation of Horned Cattle, on the disastrous effects of slaughtering agricultural cattle. The lecturer received an enthusiastic ovation, and a resolution was adopted supporting his views.

The Allahabad Memorial, the Pioneer, and the Bombay Times comment strongly on the conduct of the Bombay Government in maintaining corrupt magistrates in office, in open defiance of the recent decision of the High Court, declaring them ineligible under the provisions of 49 George III., c. 126, which extends 5 and 6 Edward VI., c. 16, to Indian appointments. As Mr. Justice Stephen points out, the word "office" includes all places or employments whatsoever in any public department, in any part of Her Majesty's dominions; and everyone commits a misdemeanour who purchases any office, gives any reward or profit for the purchase thereof, or promises to do so. Whoever commits such misdemeanour, upon its commission forfeits to the Crown any right in his office, and is disabled from holding it for life, and it is not lawful for the Crown to relieve him from such liability. Yet in spite of this the implicated officials have been reappointed by the Bombay Government in the last Gazette.

The Bombay Times says it cannot be hidden from sight that the persons complained of are magistrates and civil Judges, exercising enormous powers, and that an attempt is being made to fritter away an Act of Parliament by disingenuous devices. The question of public concern, to which no answer has yet been returned by the Bombay Government, is, whether the provisions of an Act of Parliament, judicially declared to be binding, and applicable to India, which forbids the retention in judicial or administrative office of men who have paid money to obtain or keep office, are to be contravened by the Executive. The prompt action ordered by the Secretary of State is ignored. The Pioneer describes the corruption disclosed as existing in the Bombay subordinate administration as "the open sore of the Deccan."

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 29.

Sharp skirmishes between the military police and the dacoits are reported from the Toungdwingyee and Shwebo districts in Upper Burma. Ottama's band is still active in Minbu. Momeit in the Shan States is again troubled by dacoits. A large band belonging to Bohtwinngi Ngamoung's force has appeared at Sagadoung, to the north-west of Bernardmyo. It has been found necessary to reinforce the military police at Sagadoung with 100 men. It is reported that more than 6,000 cattle have died in Shwebo from cattle disease.

The Rangoon Times announces that some papers captured in a dacoit camp prove that the various insurgent bands throughout Upper Burma are in close communication, and possess an organisation which might almost be described as an intelligence department. Extracts from the captured papers show that frequent references are made to the expected arrival of the Mingwoon Prince, who is apparently recognised by all the scattered bands. The Mingwoon Prince, who is the only remaining Alompra Prince with any position as a pretender, and who is undoubtedly the most legitimate surviving representative of Burmese royalty, has been a resident for some years at Pondicherry as a pensioner of the French Government. The local journals recently announced that the Governor of Pondicherry had notified the Mingwoon Prince that the French Government would no longer pay him a pension. This will place the Prince in a position of some difficulty, as it is believed that he possesses no private resources. Should he enter British India he would be immediately arrested. If he succeeded in reaching Upper Burma—of which there seems no present probability—his appearance would certainly have a very disturbing effect on the people, especially in the Shan States. The Mingwoon's mother was a Shan Princess.

An official inquiry of an extraordinary character is being held at Mandalay, by order of the local government. The proceedings are instituted in respect of the alleged tattooing of a woman. About two months ago the Mandalay Herald announced that an official in the police force, suspecting the fidelity of a Burmese girl, his mistress, had in revenge caused her to be branded or tattooed on her forehead with opprobious words. The Mandalay Herald offered a reward for the discovery of the injured girl, who was said to have been spirited away when the case became known. These advertisements continued for several weeks without any action being taken by the local government. The case was subsequently com mented on by other local journals, and eventually taken up by the Government. The delay which occurred has greatly increased the difficulty of the investigation, and so far as the inquiry has proceeded it has not been clearly proved that the alleged outrage took place. A very general belief, however, prevails that the crime was committed, and many persons profess to know the name of the culprit. The Government has not offered a reward, or promised indemnity and protection to the witnesses who may come forward. In the present condition of Upper Burma it is absolutely impossible to get Burmans to testify against European officials without a strong official assurance that they will be protected if they give evidence.

The following telegram, dated July 2, has been received at the India Office from the Government of Madras:—

"Condition of Ganjam for week ending June 29—Prospects improved, owing to rain. Average fall in district during week under report at 19 stations 2·13 in.; as compared with last two years' total average fall during June 4·45 in. against 2·10 in 1888, and 6·40 in 1887. Prices of rice and ragi still rising; average of rice 10·18, ragi 16·67 seers per rupee. Numbers on large works 8,551, on small, 8,422. Decrease due to agricultural operations. Gratuitous relief largely extended; 26,847 recipients. Returns incomplete. Deaths from cholera 749. Imports of grain by land 359 tons."

THE POLICE NI INDIA.

(Madras Mail.)

In the old days, when there were no Police at all, a great part of the work now allotted to the force was carried out by the military. Little detachments of sepoys were scattered over the country, maintaining order, guarding prisons, escorting treasure, and performing a variety of other useful duties. Many exceptions were properly taken to the arrangement. It was not a good one from either a civil or military point of view. The sepoys probably did not make the best chowkidars and village guards that could have been obtained, nor was it exactly work for which a standing Army is advantageously maintained. Regimental efficiency suffered from corps being broken up in this manner, and it was admitted that the more purely civil functions could be better carried out by a force distinct from the regular Army. Even in those times, however, Government suffered from an occasional want of available cash, and as it was unwilling, while relieving the Army of part of its work, to maintain it at its existing strength, and add to it a Police force, it was finally determined that a Police force should be raised, and the Army proportionately reduced, on the distinct understanding that the new Police force should always retain a sufficiently military character to enable it to maintain internal peace, and permit of the Army being set free whenever required by danger elsewhere. This was one of the chief recommendations of those who advocated the formation of the Police force, and it was mainly on its being clearly guaranteed that the leading military authorities of the day withdrew their opposition to a reduction in the strength of the Army. The basis on which the Police force then was formed was that it took the place to some extent of the Army, and that it was always to maintain so much of military discipline as to render military interference unnecessary for the preservation of the peace of the country. Accordingly, specially selected military officers were posted to the force, and for some years it could perform manœuvres, and constables were found who knew the difference between the butt and the business end of their muskets. How different their state of military efficiency was then from what it is now requires no comment. To-day the armament is a farce; manœuvring power is non-existent, and military discipline, which should enable a small armed guard to overawe a mob, has, it may be feared, almost died out.

As time went on the schoolmaster advanced, and the land was blessed with railways and telegraphs. In fact, a hundred years of the secure establishment of peace under the British flag had its natural result in the development of commerce and agriculture, and the subsidence of the deadly feuds and predatory incursions which had of old time denied prosperity to the country. The military feature of the police thus became more and more obscured. If the sword had not been turned into a ploughshare, the armed man no longer despoiled the husbandman at will; education was gradually spreading; men, whose fathers would have cut each other's throats, became aware that there were other and less violent methods of wreaking vengeance or acquiring wealth. Hence, the Police are now face to face with a state of affairs which the relic of what was once their organisation was not meant to cope with. Started as a sort of substitute for a portion of the Army, they soon declined into village peons capable of grasping vulgar forms of crime, but with no means of, and no instruction in meeting the more advanced kinds of robbery which are now common. Attached to certain centres, or circles, the preserver of the public peace was unable to go beyond their borders; while the miscreant he pursued could step comfortably across to the next jurisdiction, or else rail at happy discretion to the other end of India. And although it is believed this state of affairs has been improved upon, the condition of the force still remains anomalous and archaic. The railway, telegraph, and post-office are used with considerably greater freedom by the breakers of the law than by those whose appointed task it is to see that the law's majesty be not violated; and the former portion of society accordingly enjoys a unique, but regrettable immunity from punishment.

Thus it will be seen that Police organisation should be scanned from two main standpoints, which may be called the ancient and modern respectively; the ancient representing the legend of military efficiency, and the modern, the new accretions upon the force's duties which the advance of civilisation has entailed.

A number of men fortuitously assembled, with brass numbers on their jackets, and mediæval muskets in their hands, but without previous drill, are only superior to the mob to which they may be opposed in that, if fortunate, they have some European, or superior native subordinate at their head. The moral enthusiasm is, temporarily, on the side of the crowd. It has assembled for some definite object, loot, or what not; it is certainly excited. The Police have nothing but a sense of duty to sustain them, and experience has proved that, with ordinary human nature, that sense is insufficient unless guided by the habit of discipline, or in other words, previous training. On the other hand, discipline, of the limited kind here meant, although it should enable the Police to maintain order, will not materially assist them in tracking crime, and, as has been seen, criminals have of late years got considerably ahead of their pursuers. While, therefore, discipline must be maintained in the force so also must improved education and enlarged detective means be introduced; and the solution of the difficulty is probably best sought in dividing the two requirements, and whilst insisting upon vastly superior discipline in the main body adding thereto a special, highly trained corps for detective work. This was the scheme sketched a few years ago by Colonel Ewart, of the Punjab Police, at the request of the Government of the Punjab. His ideas found favour at the time with the supreme authorities, but they seem to have suffered the same fate as many others before them, and been strangled by red tape, or left for dead in some official pigeon ole, for, so far as is generally known, only some of the smaller recommendations have been acted upon. This would probably be found to be due to the fact that money was required to carry them out, for Colonel Ewart, having travelled in America and other go-ahead countries where parsimony on police expenditure is not always mistaken for a bright and shining kind of economy, had courageously suggested the adoption of telephones in big cities, and a variety of other matters for assisting detectives to cope with crime. So we come back to the primeval Treasury postulate:—"No police need apply for more funds." But if any member of the force desires to achieve disappointment let him estimate the present approximate cost of the force, then, working on Colonel Ewart's plan, and being sure not to forget the ancient and modern sides of his subject, see if for the same amount he cannot produce one, smaller probably in size, that shall be of more use in the suppression of disorder and the detection of crime. Only by a thorough overhauling of the whole of the system can efficiency be restored to the police.

THE POSITION IN GANJAM.

(Madras Mail.)

After the Hon. Mr. Garstin had visited Ganjam in November last, under the special orders of Government, he reported that though there was as yet no famine in the district it was highly probable that severe distress would occur before the next monsoon. His prediction has been more than fulfilled. The best hope for the country lay in the occurrence of timely showers in the early months of the year, but hardly any fell. In February the rainfall was nil; in March it amounted to 0.06 of an inch; and in April to something under two cents. Of course no large amount of rain was to be expected in these months, but the almost total failure has destroyed what small results might have been expected. The consequence has been that the prospects of the country have got worse, and the distress has been intensified. Week after week the Season Reports, which appear regularly in the Fort St. George Gazette, have contained the summary—"Dry crops injured from want of rain. Scarcity of water very severely felt. Pasturage insufficient." At the same time the numbers on gratuitous relief have been increasing, the death-roll from cholera has been growing, and the strain placed upon the District Staff has been becoming more severe. The departure of Lord Connemara, accompanied by the Chief Secretary, for Ganjam yesterday, during the hottest season of the year, shows that the state of affairs is regarded by the Government in a serious light. Although no official admission has yet been made that famine has actually occurred in the Northern District the line which divides the existing distress from positive famine must be very slight indeed.

We have published the text of several of the reports of the Collector of Ganjam on the subject. Beside these reports, no one who has followed the Gazette's weekly reports needs to be told that matters have been getting worse and worse. The total number of coolies on the relief-works is not a sufficiently accurate guide, though that shows some startling figures. On the 1st January there were about 3,000 persons employed on the Rushikulya works, and by the middle of February this number had increased to 5,000. For a month the figures varied little, but towards the end of March they began to advance by leaps and bounds, till on the 6th ult., they reached 12,750, nearly as many again being employed on other projects of relief. During the second week in April there occurred a great diffusion of the cholera epidemic, which had been hanging about the district for months, and this caused a stampede, which immediately effected an immense reduction in the number of labourers on the relief-works. The deaths from cholera rose from 100 in one week to 600 a fortnight later, and in another two weeks reached nearly 1,300. Over 4,000 persons are believed to have succumbed in a month. We hear of one district officer who had no less than six of his servants down with cholera at the same time. The marked decline in the number of coolies employed on works since the beginning of April is, consequently, not attributable to an improvement of the outlook, but to causes that point to the increase of alarm and distress. But a more certain test is supplied by the figures of those receiving gratuitous relief. These are mostly people too emaciated, or too sickly to work, and to them a dole in money is given. So late as March 1 there were but 260 persons receiving this form of relief, but four weeks later, on April 1, they had increased to 2,800, and by the end of the same month they numbered 7,376. The numbers on gratuitous relief will, it is feared, continue to increase. The selection of the most suitable persons for relief from twice the number who apply for it is not the least of the many arduous duties of the local officers. Towards the end of the last month the Chikati Zemindar, with praiseworthy humanity, opened four poor-houses, at which 4,041 persons were fed in ten days, and as the acceptance of cooked food is always a much better test of distress than the taking of money, which few will refuse, there is ample evidence of the severity of the suffering.

Unfortunately, it is impossible to expect much improvement for at least another month. The south-west monsoon does not generally reach the district until the 20th of June at earliest, and this arrival of the rains must be awaited before any large fall in prices can be looked for. Meanwhile, the food stores are being mainly obtained by land from Orissa, and it is a most fortunate circumstance that, so far, there has been no falling-off in the supplies received thence. At present there appear to have been but trifling importations by sea, and the Government has not as yet considered it wise to interfere with the operations of private trade. Nevertheless there has been no considerable rise in prices for some time, the scarcity rates already prevailing being high enough, and the want of water seems likely to be as serious a matter as anything. The rainfall of the twelve months 1888-89 amounted to 26 inches, against an average of nearly 46. All the tanks have long been dry, and the wells and streams are fast being exhausted. At the same time that the water is giving out, the pasturage for cattle is disappearing, and the ryot who has a reserve of food sufficient for his own consumption is thus threatened with financial ruin, if he survives the scarcity, by the loss of all his live stock. The first class to suffer on such occasions are the artisans, for they depend on the power of the community to purchase luxuries, and such purchases are soonest curtailed. The Government recognised the claims of the weavers and others to relief at an early date, and sanctioned a system of advances to them. The next to feel the pinch are the landless labourers, whose wages are paid in kind, and who find their allowances reduced. Lastly, the ryot class proper is affected, those who are without capital and with small holdings being the first to suffer. There is no clear evidence to show what strata of the population in Ganjam have as yet been touched by absolute want; but there is abundant evidence that the state of the district is most serious, and there is grave reason to fear that, as water, pasturage, and grain become exhausted, it will get worse. If there is an early and sufficient monsoon we may hope that the worst of the scarcity will be over in a month; but should the rains unhappily hold off, or prove a failure, it is unquestionable that a famine of no small proportions will result. Meantime, there is little to be done but to hope for the best, and Lord Connemara's timely visit at least show the suffering population and the officers who are labouring to assist it that they are not forgotten.

INDIAN GRADUATES.

(Statesman.)

We accustom ourselves to measure the graduates of our Indian Universities by a standard that is never applied elsewhere, and certainly not at home. We expect them to be young men of more or less distinction, whereas we have to accustom ourselves to the fact that it is only a man here and there who ever does achieve distinction in any country. Thus who ever thinks of graduates of the Universities at home being men of distinction? We know well, and reconcile ourselves to the fact, that it is a very few only of the number who leave Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, Edinburgh, St. Andrew's, or the London University, who ever achieve greatness. Not five, we suppose, in a hundred of them ever do distinguish themselves, but develope in the course of years into quiet, respectable, and efficient men in the various walks of life that open before them. The fact that a University education does little more for the thousands of young men who receive it than give them an opportunity of making valuable friendships, and acquiring correct taste and cultivated manners is so well known, that it has become almost proverbial with us to say that it is the self-educated man who is likely to achieve distinction in after life, and not the cultivated product of the University. Take it as we will, it is obviously unjust, and even ridiculous, to expect that the crowd of young graduates who emerge, year after year, from the class-rooms of our Indian colleges and Universities, will ever be distinguished for anything more than the "hall mark" upon them. All that we can reasonably hope is that a man here and there amongst them will rise above the level of his fellows from a love of learning for its own sake, and the wider range of view that the University has given him above his fellows. In the course of years he may come to the front of the profession he may have taken up, be it what it may. It is at times inexplicable how such simple considerations can be overlooked. The oversight arises from our not making sufficient allowance for the circumstances that differentiate one nation from another. We forget that the standard by which, as Englishmen, we are accustomed to measure other nations is a conventional one, and that we have no more right to measure them by our standard, than they have to measure us by their own. What can be more false or absurd than the standard by which Frenchmen generally measure ourselves. Thus we have been accustomed for centuries to pride ourselves upon the English fist, while the Frenchman regards boxing as degrading, and cannot understand how a gentleman should trust his honour to anything but the foil. In India, we are too ready to exalt ourselves upon our national customs and characteristics. There are hundreds of young Englishmen in the country who would feel a hearty respect and liking for the young native B.A. if the latter could but hold his own with him with the gloves, or at "single stick," or could handle the oar as he does himself. Prejudices of this order are sure to weaken, if they do not destroy, the respect which the young B.A. would otherwise secure, but everyone upon reflection can see how arbitrary and unjust it is to apply such standards to the youth of other countries. The faults of Young India are no doubt conspicuous, but no good will be done by constantly harping upon them.

THE U. C. S. GRIEVANCES.

(Madras Mail.)

The rejection by the House of Commons of Sir Roper Lethbridge's motion for the appointment of a Special Committee of Inquiry into the grievances and claims of the Uncovenanted Service by a majority of thirty-four votes will create a serious feeling of disappointment in the minds of all who are interested in this much debated subject, but it is to be hoped that it will not create a feeling of despair. The first principle of all agitations should be reiteration, and with the claims of the Uncovenanted Civil Service acknowledged, as they are, to be justifiable the right method of procedure can only be uncompromising importunity. The Government has again been too strong, and while Sir John Gorst admitted the merits of the grievances he refused to exact any fresh taxes in India on behalf of the pensioners of the Indian Government. From a disinterested point of view this course of action seems unjust. If he feels bound to admit the claims of the Uncovenanted Civilians he is not justified in burking the question on financial considerations. The case is clear enough. Either the Government of India is morally bound to make good the claims regarding the pensions of its Uncovenanted Servants or it is not, and after admitting that the claims are just it is difficult to understand on what ethical conclusions Sir John Gorst bases his argument regarding the pecuniary side of the matter. If one man owed another man some money the Law Courts would very soon show the debtor the fallacy of arguing with his creditor that he could not pay the debt because he (the debtor) would have to raise money to do so. And here the case is exactly similar. Once admit the claims to be justifiable and on no moral ground can those claims be shelved. There would not be any difficulty, one would think, in raising the comparatively small sum required for satisfying the legitimate claims of the Uncovenanted Civil Service. When this question last came before the House of Commons Sir John Gorst took much the same line of argument that he does at present, viz., a financial one, averring that if an order were issued to satisfy the claims the order would have to bear retrospective effect, and that Government was not prepared to go so far. After Mr. H. S. King's motion was lost much was done by the Indian Uncovenanted Civil Service Association in the way of making their claims more universally heard, and understood. But their efforts have been in vain. Although the question is not a party one it was thought quite possible that Sir Roper Lethbridge's motion for a Committee of Enquiry would be rejected by Government, as there is a large following of Members of the House of Commons, who, not knowing or caring anything about the matter, would vote as the Government was pleased to direct them. The present Government has learnt what it is to be defeated on Indian questions, and since its defeat on Mr. S. Smith's motion condemning the fiscal system of India, care has, no doubt, been taken to prevent a repetition of such defeats.

So much has lately been said on the grievances of the Uncovenanted Civil Service, and the matter has been so much discussed at home and in India by the Press and at meetings, that nothing new remains to be said on the suject. The matter has passed the stage of discussion. The only fear is that it will be allowed now to relapse into "the slumbering of a decided opinion." Until the righteous grievances of the service are redressed, however, this slumbering ought not to be allowed to take place. The Uncovenanted officers, the comfort of whose whole future life is at stake, so far as the pension grievances go, must, so far as is not inconsistent with the duty they owe to Government, keep on agitating. It must be remembered that it is a case of bread and butter with them, of bread, perhaps, without the butter, and the cause, admitted by all to be a righteous one, must not be allowed to suffer by lethargy in airing their claims, or stinginess in providing the sinews of war. Hitherto, considering the large interests at stake, the demands for funds made by the Association have been very paltry, and in very many cases, it is to be feared, have not been adequately complied with by Uncovenanted officers, whose interests are thus being gratuitously looked after. The time has come when combined action and pecuniary support are more than ever necessary, and if, after renewed efforts, it is pronounced by the majority of Uncovenanted officers to be hopeless to look for the complete redressing of their grievances, then let them petition for revision of the Leave Rules, and for a minimum rate of exchange for rupee pensions.

We do not know how the Ceylon Government finds the money for the payment of its rupee pensions at a fair rate of exchange, but it does find it, and it is not very likely that the incidence of increased taxation is even perceptible. The pecuniary difficulty has been surmounted in Ceylon, and justice is being done, while here in India the pecuniary difficulty is said to be insurmountable, and injustice is the consequence. In the present state of affairs there is no guarantee to the Uncovenanted Civil Servant in India that his pension will not dwindle down in future years to even a lower limit than it is at present. That more grumbling has not taken place is due no doubt to the vague and undefined hope that "something will turn up" to better the rate of exchange. The Monetary Conference which is to meet in the autumn will perhaps do something, but the vested interests at stake will make a bouleversement of the world's monetary system extremely difficult; in fact, itis extremely improbable that an articial bolstering up of silver coinage will ever be found practicable. It would probably be better for the Uncovenanted officers if they finally gave up all these visionary hopes of a better rate in exchange, because such hopes are calculated to rob the agitation now on foot of much of its vitality.

BENGAL.

(June 16.)

IT has been decided by the Government of India to transfer permanently to the diocese of Rangoon one Chaplaincy from the diocese of Calcutta and one from the diocese of Madras. This will be effected either by the transference of two chaplains now on the list, or by appropriating the next vacancy occurring in each of the above-mentioned dioceses to the diocese of Rangoon.

BEFORE the Deputy Magistrate of Alipore on Thursday, Prince Mohamed Roshun Gohur, of Tollyganj, charged a Mahomedan with insulting him and offering for sale some obscene books. Accused called at the Prince's house and asked him to purchase the books. The latter, while declining the offer, advised him not to offer the books for sale, upon which he grossly insulted him. On this the Prince snatched away the books, and the accused immediately ran away, but soon after he was arrested. On his house being searched some more obscene books were recovered. Accused pleaded not guilty, stating that he had once before been convicted for this offence, and so he could not be convicted again. The magistrate sentenced him to three months' rigorous imprisonment, and directed the books to be burned, which was carried out immediately.

THE new pilot brig, the Fame, lately built by Government at Bombay, has just gone to the Sandheads to make a trial trip there, to prove her qualifications for the peculiar service of doing pilotage duties. The pilot station has been very efficiently served for over a month by only one vessel, the Sarsuti, she doing the double duty of attending to both inward and outward vessels, and the manner in which the work has been performed during that period at all hours, both by night as well as by day, is very creditable to Mr. C. S. Mills, the Branch Pilot in charge; there not having been one case of detention or inconvenience to ship through the brig being off her proper cruising station, or she not being ready to send off her boat in time, when approached by a vessel needing her services. And Mr. Mills is all the more to be congratulated on the satisfaction he has given, as this, we hear, is his first regular command of a pilot brig, and moreover, having the whole responsibility of the pilot station devolving upon him.

VIOLATION OF SALT RULES BY FAMINE-STRICKEN PEOPLE.—Before Mr. McGuire, Joint-Magistrate of Alipur, nine men and a female were brought by the police from Bistopur, a village in the Sub-Division of Diamond Harbour, and charged with manufacturing salt. The defendants all pleaded guilty, stating that they violated the rules as they had no other means of obtaining their livelihood, and that they were already living on wild herbs. Mr. McGuire was obliged to convict them and fine them Rs. 2 each, in default to a week's simple imprisonment. The male defendants desired to be sent to jail, as they had no money to pay the fine, but the woman prayed that if she were to be sent to jail she might be allowed to take her two infant children along with her, or else they both would starve to death. Mr. McGuire modified her sentence, and ordered her to pay a fine of one rupee. A Native gentleman who was present in court immediately paid the fine and obtained the woman's discharge.

THE Bengal ryot is well known to be subject to sudden and unreasoning panics. The latest, writes the Englishman, is an alarm, utterly groundless for the most part, of dacoity. Its influence must be widespread, for it is raging with equal violence in Patna, Pubna, Bagura, and Rungpore. A large tract of country in the south of the latter district lately resounded with the beating of alarm drums. The police, on hurrying to the scene of action, found every householder in front of his homestead, flourishing a club, and shouting "Dacoit." The information given was very confusing; but after a wild goose chase that lasted the best part of a night, the scare was traced to its origin—a couple of peaceful wayfarers, one carrying a lantern.

A HYDERABAD correspondent telegraphed on Wednesday —A public meeting was held at Chudderghat on Monday to express sympathy with the Rajah Kishen Pershad at the death of his grandfather, the Maharajah Narain Pershad Narainder Bahadoor Peishkar. The meeting was largely attended by all sections of the local community. The Nawab Zainulabdin was in the chair. Rajah Murali Monohur and some other city nobles, who were unable to attend the meeting, sent their representatives. The principal speakers, Mr. Krishna Iengar and Moulvie Abdool Guffoor, vakils of the High Court, spoke in eulogistic terms of the late Peishkar Bahadoor, and expressed a hope that Rajah Kishen Pershad, the heir of the late Peishkar Bahadoor, would prove himself a worthy successor of his grandfather. The meeting resolved to send a deputation, with a letter of condolence, to Rajah Kishen Pershad. The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chair. It is proposed to hold another meeting in the city.

A FINE TIGER-SHOOTING GROUND.—The Bangalore Spectator remarks:—"On the 15th of this month passenger trains will run as far as Arsikeri on the Tumkur line. Leaving Bangalore at 8 A.M. one can reach the finest tiger-shooting grounds in the world by 3 P.M., bag half-dozen tigers and return to dinner in Bangalore next day. Major Pleydell, 12th Royal Lancers (well known in Bangalore), bagged no less than five of these ferocious creatures in the course of a morning within a mile or two of the Arsikeri Travellers' Bungalow some few years ago. Tigers are still plentiful in this neighbourhood; the low scrub forest and meagre cultivation is just such a locality as Stripes loves to haunt. A large buffalo was killed within a stone's throw of the Harnahalli gold-mine lately by one of these beasts."

AN OLD FORT.—The following letter was recently addressed to Government by Mr. A. T. Arundel, Collector of the Kistna District:—"I have the honour to report that the buildings connected with the old palace and fort of Kondapalle, in the Bezvada tank, are in need of attention to prevent their further destruction. The place is of much historical and some architectural interest. The fort is said to date from the 14th century. It was occupied by the Mahomedans in the 15th century, and was the favourite residence of two of the kings of Golconda. It surrendered to Aurungzeb's troops in 1687, and to General Cailland in 1766. Of the old palace, or Bala Hissar, only one room and a number of decorated pillars remain. The unroofed buildings of the zenana and the numerous courtyards are overgrown with trees and brushwood, and are almost inaccessible, while the roots are gradually breaking down the solid masonry. It will not require a large sum to check the destruction which is going on. The single-roofed building that remains is being fitted for occupation, and will be maintained in good order by the Forest Department. I would ask if the Government think fit, for an ailotment of Rs. 200 after the 1st April next to clear away destructive vegetation and protect some of the arches and other buildings from dilapidation. A subsequent allotment of Rs. 50 per annum would suffice for protective purposes for a long time to come. Government has accordingly been pleased to allot the sum required by the Collector."

The reports of the District Officers in Ganjam for the week ending the 25th ultimo have been summarised and commented upon by Mr. Horsfall, the Collector of Ganjam. From these reports it appears that prospects were looking a little brighter since the welcome fall of rain. In the Mohana Division, which has suffered most, suitable rains had fallen, and cultivation had commenced. Mr. Horne estimated that by the end of August, when the first early dry crops are reaped, distress there will be at an end, assuming that the season progresses favourably. Mr. Carr had returned to head-quarters, having completed the jamabundi of the three estates of Bodogoda, Dharakot, and Chinnakimidi. The numbers on gratuitous relief in the Chinnakimidi estate have gone on steadily increasing, and on the 25th ultimo amounted to 1,358, or about 5 per cent. of the total population. The collector considered that the Digapudi-Govindapur road should be put in hand at once as a famine relief work, and that kitchens for distribution of cooked food should be started at the two centres—Pettupur and Pudamari—but he would not, on this account, stop village relief. It is only the very lowest classes that will take cooked food, prepared though it be by Brahmin cooks. It is the case now, he says, as it was in 1866, that the ryot prefers death to taking cooked food. The good showers that fell were of incalculable benefit, "they have given heart to the desponding people, have enabled the ryots to plough, and in some places to sow the early gingelly crop, have provided pasturage for the cattle, and mitigated to a great extent the suffering from drought." In Gumsur the numbers on gratuitous relief had also largely increased, but good rain had fallen and the ryots were busily employed in ploughing and sowing their lands, and the General Deputy Collector did not think it necessary to start village relief circles or a kitchen for the distribution of food. Over 100 persons were receiving gratuitous relief, but it must be borne in mind that the taluk is a very large one, with over 750 villages. Prices, though very high compared with ordinary years, had not, on the 25th ultimo, reached the scarcity rates prescribed by Government.

BOMBAY.

(June 18.)

THE Rev. J. A. Sellar, M.A., has been appointed to officiate as Chaplain of Aden.

MR. J. H. TODD, C.S., has been appointed Collector and Magistrate, Rutnagherry.

MR. W. L. HARVEY, C.S., Assistant Collector, Bijapore, has been allowed privilege leave of absence for three months.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL T. M. WARD acts as Superintendent, Konkan Revenue Survey, during the absence of Colonel C. W. Godfrey.

THE services of Brigade-Surgeon A. Barry, M.D., F.R.C.S., have been replaced at the disposal of Government in the Military Department.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL J. F. WILLOUGHBY, General List, Infantry, Commandant 3rd Bombay Cavalry, has been granted leave out of India for six months.

MR. J. L. LUSHINGTON, Assistant Superintendent Deccan Revenue Survey, has been promoted from the 2nd to the 1st Grade of Assistant Superintendent.

MESSRS. LUND, BLOCKLEY, AND CARTER have been entrusted with the manufacture of the clock and time ball for the new offices at the Prince's and Victoria Docks.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL has been pleased to appoint Surgeon-Major W. G. H. Henderson to be Civil Surgeon, Ahmednugger, vice Surgeon-Major E. Colson, retired.

MR. H. R. COOKE, C.S., on his return will relieve Mr. Allen, C.S., as Collector and Magistrate of the district of Kaira. The latter will act as Collector and Magistrate of the district of Broach.

SURGEON W. H. Quicke acts as Medical Officer to the Kattywar Political Agency, and will be in charge of the West Hospital, Rajkote, during the absence of Surgeon-Major F. C. Barker, M.D., F.R.C.S. (I.), or pending further orders.

MESSRS. DEWJEE BHANJEE AND CO., a firm of muccadums, have failed, their liabilities extending over three lakhs of rupees. It is said that a deed of composition is being signed, as the firm are going to settle with their several creditors.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay season report for the past week:—Rain in Guzerat, Konkan, Deccan, Southern Mahratta Country, and Hyderabad. Preparations for kharif crops in progress generally. Probable rabi outturn in Shikarpore thirteen annas. Damage done to crops by crickets in Upper Sind Frontier.

IT is curious, thinks the Sind Gazette, that the Superintending Engineer of the Sukker bridge should have received no acknowledgment on the part of the Government in the shape of a decoration for services so conspicuous and meritorious as his have been. The engineers of the bridges at Attock and Benares both received the Companionship of the Indian Empire; and the construction of the Sukker bridge is a work of greater importance, and involved even a larger expenditure of thought, skill, and care than either of the other two great works. Mr. Robertson's professional distinction is not, of course, in any way lessened by the omission of the Government, but it is to the apparently discredit of Bombay that one of its most able servants should have been left unnoticed in the "Birthday Honours" list.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

(June 16.)

MR. R. J. CROSTHWAITE took his seat in the Supreme Legislative Council on Thursday.

VARIOUS improvements are being introduced in the Viceregal Lodge at Simla. The Lodge is being connected by telephone with the Foreign Office, and a wire will probably be carried on to the Home Office, which is distant about two miles.

A SHOOTING match took place on the 8th inst. at Simla between two teams of ten men each from the Volunteers and the Wiltshire Regiment, the former winning by 16 points. The ranges were 200, 500, and 600 yards. There will be a return match at Sabathu about the end of this month.

THERE were several deaths of heat apoplexy in Allahabad during the 9th instant. Mr. Holt, C.S., was stricken down, and was discovered lying in one of the roads near his bungalow quite insensible. He was conveyed to the Civil Hospital, where, we (Morning Post) regret to learn, he still lies in a precarious condition.

THE Morning Post writes:—We were wrong in stating in our yesterday's issue that Mr. Holt, C.S., was picked up insensible in the road near his house. He had been ill for two or three days before the attack, and lapsed into unconsciousness while in his bedroom. Up to four o'clock last evening Mr. Holt continued unconscious, though he was at times restless. His body keeps cool and the pulse regular. Every care is being taken of the unfortunate gentleman, and hopes are entertained of his recovery.

WE (Morning Post) are extremely glad to state that Mr. Holt, C.S., yesterday recovered consciousness after lying for more than forty-eight hours at the Civil Hospital, Allahabad, in a state of insensibility. The sufferer is very weak, but it is hoped he will make speedy progress towards recovery.

A NATIVE correspondent from Kotah, a tributary State in Rajputana, writes to the Lahore paper to say that a daring plot to poison the Maharajah of that place has recently been brought to light. It appears that certain State confederates lately became inimical to the Rajah, and two of these, who are said to have been directly concerned in the plot, have been arrested. The Maharajah, it appears, had ordered certain strengthening medicines for his use, and in the course of their preparation the accused are alleged to have mixed a quantity of arsenic in it.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The first article, by Mrs. E. Lynn-Linton, on "Threatened Abdication of Man," is a protest against the threatened usurpation of women who wish to work in a sphere not their own. It is a well-written paper, and should command attention. The authoress, in conclusion, writes:—"It is a sad thought for those of us who honour our country, and rejoice in its greatness—who honour men, and believe them to be our national leaders, who love our own sex, and believe in its sweetest virtues and purest influences. It is, I say, a sad thought to dwell on the future times when man shall have tamely yielded the very key of England's glory—her strong masculinity of rule—and shall have delivered up the nation to the feverish and uncertain domination of women." Dr. Creighton has written an article on vaccination, being a reply to one that appeared in the June number by Mr. W. H. Pryton Thomas. If the arguments adduced are not convincing, they have the merit of being a scholarly production. Georges Sand, at an English school, will be read with interest by the admirers of this brilliant writer and eccentric character.

The sketch of the life and writings of William Gifford is well drawn, and contains many interesting particulars of his life and writings. He was the first Editor of the Quarterly Review, and for this work he at first received £200, and at last £900 per annum. The writer—Mr. Cyril A. Waters—thus sums up his character:—"A man with all his faults, surely not unworthy of some meed of admiration for his courageous struggle with adverse circumstances of many kinds, with poverty, ill-fortune, ill-health. It may be granted that his character was hard, and that his views in literature and politics were narrow, but he was, notwithstanding, a man of whom his country might well be proud, for it is such men as these, men of stout heart and clear intellect, of robust, moral, and intellectual fibre, who have made and kept England great, and it will be ill for England, and not well, when she ceases to breed such men, or ceases to honour them."

"Some Parliamentary Incidents," by C. W. Radcliffe Cooke, is a vivid and amusingly written sketch. It gives in a humoursome manner an account of the business of Parliament during the Session and the habits of the Members. Some of the author's descriptions are very funny. When in the smoking-room the member asked the waiter for bread and butter with his coffee; after a long absence, he returned with "a currant bun of antique mould, stale and unpalatable, a remnant from past Parliaments, which, had it been a thing of life, would have baffled a Peel and Palmerston, and demanded therefore a fabulous price as for a curiosity in breadstuffs." This is one of the best papers in the magazine, and will repay perusal. The National, taken altogether, is on a par with its predecessor, and that is saying a good deal.

PRINCE, PRINCESS, AND PEOPLE.†

"What is the use of Royalty?" Such is the question which, in spasmodic fits, agitates the unreflecting portion of the community. Such is the problem which now and again disquiets the minds of unthinking and superficial observers, who bring everything in life to the standard of materiality. "Why," say they, "should the country not dispense with the Court and all its attendant pageantries, its empty mockeries, its pompous shams, and the thousand and one frivolities which ill become this busy utilitarian age?" To such shallow critics, who are fortunately more noisy than numerous, Mr. Burdett's admirable compendium affords a fit and crushing reply. Taking the Prince and Princess of Wales as the key-stones of the edifice of Monarchy, he proceeds to exhibit them in all the "fierce light which beats upon a throne;" and what is the result? There cannot be a doubt that these exalted personages come forth from the ordeal, not only scatheless as regards hostile criticism, but with a repute for good vastly enhanced by the deep and searching inquiry which the author has made into their deeds and actions.

What is to be the standard of judgment? Is hard work to be the criterion? Then, it may be said, without fear of contradiction, that there is not a harder worked man in the kingdom than the Prince of Wales. It is true he does not toil by "the sweat of his brow"; but who, even amongst the hardest of England's toilers, could labour more assiduously than his Royal Highness? Take, for instance, his visit to Ireland in 1868—and it is only one of innumerable instances. Could more be included within a ten days' travel than the duties which were crammed into each of the twenty-four hours? Presentations, receptions, breakfasts, luncheons, dinners, suppers, races, reviews, local tours, addresses, inspections of institutions, colleges, universities, academies, libraries, speeches by the score, dances innumerable, shows of every description, and all this to be done without an appearance of fatigue, of ennui, or dulness. What artisan in the shop could work harder?

Is courage to be appreciated? Then what in this direction could be more in accordance with British pluck than his visit to an Eastern shrine, never before polluted with the presence of an alien in religion, with all the attendant risks of a fanatical outbreak or a massacre, hallowed, as assuredly would have been the case, by pious fervour and barbaric enthusiasm. Again, to come nearer home: Is there not a thought of admiration to be centred on the twain in high position who did not hesitate in 1885 to pay a visit to the Sister Isle, and this at a time when the "dynamitards" in New York had not scrupled to preach that their Royal Highnesses were "alien invaders," who, if they visited Ireland, "merited death"; when, too, the "Home Rule" party were reckless in their endeavours to inflame the people and arouse the populace.

It would be easy to dilate upon the desirable way in which the heir to the throne fulfils the duties of a landlord, to refer to his tact and judgment, to his countless endeavours at every turn to consult the convenience and gratify the wishes of the people of this land; to record the innumerable acts of sweetness which have made the name of the Princess of Wales beloved in many a cottage where the tenants have neither seen her face nor heard her voice; but space is inexorable, and we refrain. One matter, however, remains, and it speaks such volumes that it may well be left to plead its own cause. Mr. Burdett informs us that he found it impossible to present a complete list of the charities of the Prince and Princess of Wales, because so much was done unostentatiously and in secret that no means existed of tracing many of the good deeds, which should rightly and properly find a place, and be chronicled in the national annals.

But surely enough has been said to indicate that their Royal Highnesses play their part on the stage of life with credit to themselves, even viewed as ordinary citizens of the Empire; but when their exalted position is taken into consideration, it may well be supposed, nay, rather, it cannot be otherwise than the fact, that they exert a powerful influence in the direction of charity and kindness, finding expression in works of philanthropy, benevolence, and Christian sympathy. Surely then Royalty fills an all-important rôle in the drama of national existence—if, as Mr. Burdett's book amply proves, the object of the national welfare of the teeming millions is steadily and successfully kept in view—if, and the evidence on the point is overwhelming and incontrovertible, the Crown lends its aid to many a charitable society which would otherwise be unable to hold its own in the fearful struggle for existence, which must always fall to the lot of corporate bodies labouring for the poor and depending largely—in cases solely—upon private benevolence that it may fearlessly be asserted that apart from the great political questions involved in the change from a monarchy to a republic, Royalty takes no small or unimportant part in the social problems which are ever seething to the surface in our great cities, where there is, and ever will be, a varied mass of good, bad, and indifferent citizens, some having a career of right-mindedness, others reeking with vice and iniquity, while not a few are on the borderland which separates the two great divisions of humanity at large—the honest and the dishonest. If Mr. Burdett, as may be hoped, leads the many to realise the lesson which has long been known to the few, not in vain will "The Prince, the Princess, and the People" have appealed to England's better self, the loyal and patriotic portion of the community at large.

THE SON A OF STAR.*

What a wonderful race are the Jews! And yet how little is known about them even in the midst of well-informed circles. How few, for instance, how very few, are aware that during the reign of the Emperor Hadrian a revolt occurred in Palestine, with a result that the Roman flag was torn down, and, for a while, aye, a lengthened period, the standard of Judah floated over the sacred cities of the Holy Land? How many educated persons are aware that during these eventful months, when the Sons of Israel broke the yoke of servitude from off their necks, a new Jerusalem was built, with a temple gorgeous and magnificent in the extreme, such as to rival the edifice reared by Solomon the King, that from two to three hundred thousand warriors defended this superb abode of the Lord of Hosts against the oft-repeated attacks of the Roman Legions, and not till Severus, the most noted and most indomitable leader in Cæsar's cohorts, himself took the field, did the banner of his august master once again float in triumph over a doomed city, the streets of which became torrents of blood, and of which the walls were thenceforth crumbling masses of ruin? Desolation was destined to stalk with solemn sadness through the highways of a town not one stone of which was left standing upon another to proclaim the site of Israel's proud capital.

This is the episode, so pregnant with interest, so replete with instruction, which Mr. Richardson has woven into a narrative and romance as original in conception as powerful in execution. Seldom does a reviewer find opportunity of lavishing praise with an unstinted hand, and, withal, not crossing the threshhold of fulsome praise and unmerited adulation. Merely regarded from the standpoint of novelistic interest, "The Son of a Star" may well be left to its merits, but it deserves perusal, apart from any considerations as a mere work of fiction, in so far as it throws a glare of light upon a much-neglected chapter of history. Mr. Richardson has given a most carefully pencilled picture of the Jewish Race; their peculiarities, their marvellous powers alike of mind and body, their fate as conquered yet never subdued, their incredible belief in their own destiny, their well-nigh miraculous gifts of foresight and sagacity—all these and many more stand forth in the pages of this quaint and peculiar tale of Judah's efforts to found a kingdom and establish a monarchy. We are not suprised that a new edition of "The Son of a Star" has been found requisite, and we gladly avail ourselves of the opportunity which it affords of praising what we have read with pleasure, and of commending what we should have been sorry to have left unheeded.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.—PERSIA.*

The visit of the Shah to this country will direct public attention somewhat forcibly to the land of the "Lion and the Sun," of which he is the Sovereign. Mr. Benjamin's work on Persia, which forms one of Mr. Fisher Unwin's admirable series of "The Story of the Nations," deals almost exclusively with the ancient history of this most interesting region of the world; but it is well at times to look back on the past, and it cannot be otherwise than desirable to study the annals of the people over whom our guest, his Majesty Nasr u'd din Shah, has now ruled for more than forty years. Mr. Benjamin's work is concise, and yet contains sufficient information for the general reader who does not desire a wearisome array of fabulous tales and apocryphal legends.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.—PHŒNICIA.†

Of the series which Mr. Fisher Unwin is publishing under the title of "The Story of the Nations," not the least interesting will be "Phœnicia" by Professor George Rawlinson. This hardy people, so akin to ourselves in the possession of the qualities of enterprise, endurance, and a love of adventure, awakens at every turn a feeling of admiration as we read their early attempts at navigation, their first efforts to obtain mastery over the winds and waves, their courageous endeavours to cross the lonely ocean and discover new lands; but not the least reason of this bond of sympathy is the circumstance that the Phœnicians were the first travellers who, venturing beyond the Mediterranean, reached the shores of England, where for years they worked the mines on the Cornish coast. We gladly, therefore, welcome this little volume, which will be read with interest, and perused with advantage.

THE ARMY AND NAVY CALENDAR, 1889-1890.‡

Mr. Hazard, the compiler of this very useful work of reference, has in the ninth edition increased the value of this popular GUIDE BOOK for the Army, Navy, and General Public. As the author correctly observes, "It is certainly the only Calendar published at the commencement of the Army and Navy financial year, and contains, therefore, the only reliable information concerning the Services for twelve months." The various changes contemplated by the Government for the greater effciency of the land and sea forces are promulgated before the 1st of April, and, as the chief staff appointments are also made to take effect from this date, it is obvious that if the "Army and Navy Calendar" were published in January (three months before the Army and Navy year began) it would be practically out of date.

"Barrack Accommodation," and "The Chief Military and Naval Stations in India, the Colonies, &c.," are well described, and illustrated with many original maps and plans, and should prove of the greatest value to staff officers of regiments.

Military Stations in Great Britain are fully described—with details of barrack accommodation, &c., with plans of barracks on one page—secondly, a map of the town facing this information; thirdly, advertisements of hotel proprietors and local tradesmen on the following page.

In looking through the contents of this publication the reader cannot fail to be struck with the amount of military information it contains. No subject affecting the army at home and abroad is left untouched. The work may be described without the slightest exaggeration as being in the widest sense of the term "the soldier's vade mecum," and will, whenever a question is raised in connection with the Service, be confidently appealed to by both sides. Mr. John Hazard shows himself to be an enthusiast in his work, and has produced a volume that will be found in the ante-room, the sergeant's mess, and the soldier's library. The book has been carefully printed, and reflects credit upon Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.

THE SIMLA SEASON.

The Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne, writes the Saturday Evening Journal, of June 15th, were to have left Simla last Friday on another short visit to Naldira, and as the weather is now favourable the trip ought to be thoroughly enjoyable.

THE ETON DINNER.

Sir Frederick Roberts gave his usual annual Eton dinner at Simla on the 4th of June, at which Lord Lansdowne, an old Eton boy, was present, and the party was rather a large one, as there are just now a good many old Etonions in Simla. The anniversary must call up pleasant memories of Surley Hall to many of them, where it was always a matter of much amusement to see the small boys putting away unlimited supplies of chicken and cold pies, and not unfrequently drinking champagne out of the bottles, if the Eight with which they were connected had been fortunate enobgh to obtain a generous sitter, which was generally the case.

BIRTHDAY STATE BALL.

The Birthday State Ball at the Viceregal Lodge on Friday week was a great success. A large number of invitations had been issued, and a peculiarity of the invitations were that replies were asked for. It is not usual to see the letters "R. S. V. P." on a State Ball card, and, according to one story, it was due to a mistake of the starioner in England who supplied the cards. In any case, replies had to be written, and some of these replies must haqe been curious productions. In all, I believe, there were some 450 guests present at the dance. As may be supposed, the crowd was too large to please the dancers, but after supper the floor cleared considerably, and there was more freedom. The ball-room and supper-room were much admired, and presented a very brilliant appearance. The electric light gave an appearance, as well as an actual sense, of coolness which was very refreshing. But, I hear, some ladies were complaining next day of the effect on their eyes.

THE FANCY FAIR.

On Wednesday last the fancy fair in aid of Bishop Coston's School was to have commenced, and to be continued on the following day. Among the novelties offered as attractions were to be a game of chess, in which the pieces will be represented by living persons dressed in appropriate character, and there was also to be the performance of a bulesque and a public dinner. Thh stall-holders are to be Mesdames Elsmie, Grey, Thornburn, Ward and Irons, and the Misses Grey, and the fair promises to be a great success.

THE RACES.

The great amusement of the week, especially for the sporting community, has, however been the races, whicb commenced on Saturday last, and ended on Thursday. The sport was very aood on the whole, though the fieldr were not very large, but this, perhaps, was ali the better, as there is not room for many horses at a time on the small course at Annandale. There was a good deal of speculation at the lotteries, the betting list, and the totalisator, but there do not appear to have been any very large winners, as the prizes were fairly divided among the different stables and favourites by no means always won. The only contretempts was on the first day, when Stratford, the rider of Belladonna, who came in first in the Selling Race, was disqualified for foul riding, and suspended for the remainder of the year.

SMOKING CONCERT.

A popular entertainment among the young men seems to have been the smoking concert at the New Club, provious to which some seventy members and guests sat down to dinuer. There is a very strong collection of musical talent, both vocal and instrumental, at present in Simla, and as a large number of these were present at the New Club, both the singing and playing was of a high class and thoroughly appreciated. Among those present were Sir E. Buck, Hon. Mr. Scoble, Lord William Beresford, Colonel Gatacre, Colonel Pritchard, Major Rowan Hamilton, and other well-known Simla celebrities, and after the concert an adjournment was made to a late supper, where there was a good amount of speaking. Undoubtedly the concert was a great success.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

KASHMIR.

Now that the Government of India has the practical control of the Kashmir administration, it is to be hoped that that Valley which has been the subject of painter's pencil and of poet's song, and which has been "a thing of beauty," and "a joy for ever" to all who have seen it, will soon become what it never yet has been under native rule —the Happy Valley—not of fable, but of fact.

Sir Lepel Griffin in his late lecture at the Colonial Institute, expressed his opinion that such a transformation might be brought about by the establishment of an English colony there :—

"The practical question regarding Kashmir is, whether it is possible to so encourage English immigration as to establish an English Colony so numerous as to largely add to our defensive strength. I believe that such a measure, which would do more to secure the North-West frontier than any possible series of fortifications in Afghanistan and Biluchistan, is perfectly practicable, and only requires to be taken up by the Home and Indian Governments with vigour and determination to be successful. The Government has, it appears to me, during the last thirty years, since the great Indian Mutiny, been strangely unmindful of its duty of encouraging the British colonisation of the mountain districts of India. The old East India Company, in the true spirit of monopolists, discouraged English settlement, and the most respectable Colonist was liable to be deported as an adventurer. Then came the Mutiny, which was to India what the Revolution was to France, and, in spite of the unfortunate incidents that accompanied it, proved the most fortunate thing for India and its Government. It was a shock which woke the country from the sleep of ages, and placed it within the family circle of civilised nations. The policy of the Government had necessarily changed, and the English settlement and English capital are recognised as valuable, and, indeed, essential to the development of the country; but the old tradition of timidity and apathy hangs heavy over the Government, and the European merchant and capitalist, who alone are able to renovate the country and fill its exhausted treasuries, are still regarded with ill-concealed dislike and suspicion, When the Government has realised that the true barrier of India against Russian agression is in a Colony of three millions of Englishmen, liable to military duty, and settled in Kashmir and on the slopes of the Himalayas, we shall see them encourage English immigration to Kashmir with as much zeal as is now shown in excluding visitors from this Himalayan paradise."

The question of planting an English Colony in the Himalayas, is one which has been frequently discussed in the press of India, but never with any satisfactory conclusion being come to by the various writers who "agreed to differ." In 1857 the Friend of India. then the most powerful journal in the country, advocated such a scheme, but a vigorous reply was soon forthcoming in an article in the Calcutta Review, written in a forcible and trenchant style—possibly from the practised and brilliant pen of the editor himself. The writer held it as an axiom that no English Colony could flourish which had not a sea-board, ocean being the best nurse of social influence and its life-giving contact being necessary to the English race above all others. Without such a sine quâ non towards existence, he was of opinion that any Himalayan Colony would resemble the happy valley of Rasselas—stagnation its bane and that it would enjoy only a stunted existence for a time and then languish and expire.

Such a view had its advocates and its opponents, but there was another view against the establishment of such a Colony, which seemed then, and seems now to have considerable weight, and that was the political one which the Reviewer explained thus :—

"It cannot be supposed that any colony of Englishmen could be induced to embody itself under the despotism—a mild despotism it may be—still the despotism, of the Anglo-Indian Government. It cannot for a moment be supposed that English colonists would place themselves under the operation of a 'Black Act,' or submit to a uniform legislation, in common with the natives of the country. It can never be imagined that they would consent to entrust their interests, their liberties, their lives, to the tender mercies of our magistrates, collectors, and deputy commissioners, or commit their fortunes to the dispensations of our mofussil law, and the hand-to-mouth jurisprudence of our provincial courts.

If further argument were needed, there remains to be simply noticed, one of a very practical and clinching character. If we were ever so disposed to invite European colonists to India, and ever so prepared for their reception and material advancement,—we could not induce them to come."

This last assertion, dogmatic and decided, is if correct, of course a complete and crushing answer to the argument in favour of such colonisation. But there is another aspect to the question, and that is the military one. Sir Lepel Griffin is not alone in his opinion of the importance of strengthening our hold on Kashmir from a military point of view. Five years ago an able writer in the Times pointed out that Kashmir was the salient angle of position with regard to Afghanistan and Central Asia, and that no one who knew the Indian borders would dispute the fact that a strong Anglo-Indian garrison in Kashmir would produce a most salutary impression along the whole of our North-West frontier. And he gave his reasons thus :—

"Of course, it may be argued that Kashmir is practically inaccessible from the north-west, that the passes of the Hindo Koosh and its spurs are impassable, and that any army coming from Badakshan or across the Pamir would only march to self-destruction.

It is true that the difficulties to be encountered would be enormous, and perhaps insuperable; but, on the other hand, it should not be lost sight of that the advantages of success would be correspondingly great. An enemy in possession of Srinagar would have turned the whole of our defences on the Indus and along the Afghan frontier, and would have gained the rear of by far the greater portion of the garrison of 50,000 men, which we now maintain in the Punjab.

He would also be able to strike a blow where he chose, at the most vulnerable point of the Punjab borders."

This we think is the true line of argument to adopt—a strong Anglo-Indian garrison in Kashmir. The suggestion of a flourishing colony of three millions of English settlers will be, by many dismissed as a dream from Utopia and nothing more—but a British garrison, strong in numbers and perfect in efficiency would be a practical solution of the difficulty of dealing with Kashmir.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

BUGLE-MAJOR FUTTEH SING BHIST, 1-4th Gurkhas, is the winner of the Magdala Medal this year with a score of sixty-four points.

THE infantry officers detailed for the survey of the Chor near Simla are not after all to be employed, the Engineers thus having all the work left to themselves.

INFORMATION has been received in India confirming a recent announcement that the Secretary of State would accept the Government of India's scheme for utilising the forces of the Native States in the defence of the North-West Frontier.

The Commander-in-Chief's musketry prizes have been awarded with the following result:—British Cavalry: 7th Dragoon Guards; British Infantry: King's Own Scottish Borderers; Native Cavalry: 3rd Bengal Cavalry; Native Infantry: 29th Punjab.

THE female nursing service at the two centres, Rawalpindi and Bangalore, will consist of lady superintendents and nursing sisters. The term "lady nurse" will include both of them. A Nursing Sister must be at the time of appointment over twenty-five years of age. The duration of term of service for both grades of lady nurses will be five years.

THE example set by the N.W. Provinces when two Volunteer officers were appointed the other day to the Lieut.-Governor's staff has been followed in Bengal, where the Gazette announces that Lieut.-Colonel W. B. Hudson of the Beher and Captain J. R. Thomas of the Calcutta Light Horse have been created Honorary Aides-de-Camp to Sir Steuart Bayley.

IT has been decided that the escort which has been detailed to accompany Captain A. G. A. Durand's Mission to Gilgit and Chitral should be provided at Rawalpindi with camp equipage, transport, and commissariat supplies on the same scales as those on which supplies were issued to the escort which accompanied the Gilgit Mission in 1885. Three orderlies of the Central India Horse will form the escort, who will be provided with clothing partly at Rawalpindi and partly at Srinagar.

IN connection with the various proposals for forming an enlarged reserve for the Native Army, is one which contemplates utilising a certain proportion of the trained police. It may be remembered that during the Panjdeh scare the Punjab Government offered to supply a number of police for service in case of necessity. And there are those who think that this source of supply might be systematically developed. The plan might have its advantages for the army, although we venture to believe it would be disastrous to the police as police.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT E. HUDELSTON.—The death of Lieutenant Edmund Hudelston, R.A., has cast a heavy gloom over the whole of the Sikkim Field Force. The untimely ending of a young life is at all times inexpressibly sad; but in the case of an officer like Lieutenant Hudleston, who, writes the Englishman, had endeared himself to his companions in arms by his thorough soldierly qualites, by his kindness of heart, and by his genial, social nature, loved by all who ever came in contact with him, the melancholy closing of a life such as his carries with it elements of more than ordinary regret and sorrow. Born in 1865, he became a Lieutenant in December, 1884, and served with the 9-1 (Mountain) Battery, Royal Artillery, in Upper Burmah, and through the whole of the Sikkim Expedition. Lieutenant Hudleston is the first officer of the Sikkim Field Force who has died, and though his service did not extend beyond four years, the great promise of his opening career adds additional poignancy to the sorrow which the men of his own battery and the whole force feel at his early death.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 27.

—o—

Mr. LABOUCHERE asked whether the hon. gentleman had not seen any of the documents, to which reference was made in the question, in print.

Sir J. GORST said that was rather a large question. He had seen a great many documents, but he had not seen any in print which would enable him to answer as to all the communications which had passed between the solicitors and the agents.

Mr. LABOUCHERE asked whether, if he submitted these documents to the hon. gentleman, he would consider whether they ought to be laid before the House, having regard to the decision of the Committee which sat to consider this subject last year.

Sir J. GORST said that, as soon as the Secretary of State had fulfilled his function in the matter, he would, no doubt, be prepared to consider what documents should be laid before the House.

Mr. LABOUCHERE asked whether the papers would be submitted to the Honse to enable the House to take the matter into consideration, and decide what action it ought to take.

Sir G. CAMPBELL wished to know whether the Under Secretary had no official information with regard to the opinions, and the advice which the British Resident at Hyderabad had given.

Sir J. GORST said that papers could not be laid for the purpose of encouraging the House to interfere with the Secretary of State in the performance of his duties. When the Secretary of State had carried out his duty in this matter it would be for the House to say whether it had been properly performed.

In reply to a further question by Sir G. CAMPBELL,

Sir J. GORST said that the Government had the opinion of the British Resident at Hyderabad upon the case.

Sir W. G. HUNTER observed that the Under-Secretary for India had misunderstood his question. He did not want to know the nature of the settlement. He asked whether the decision, whatever it might be, would be considered a final settlement of the question.

Sir J. GORST said that depended upon the company and the concessionaires. He did not know what they would consider a final settlement.

THE INDIAN COUNCIL.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, since the establishment of the rule in the India Office that memberships of the Secretary of State's Council should be held for only ten years, any appointments to that Council had been made for life; and, if so, in what instances, by what authority, and on what grounds.

Sir J. GORST.—Yes, the late Sir Henry Maine, Sir Henry Yule, and General Strachey, by authority of 39 Vic., c. 7. The special grounds for the appointments were in accordance with the statute law before both Houses of Parliament.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

In answer to Mr. MACNEILL,

Mr. W. H. SMITH said he was not in a position yet to fix a date when the Indian Budget would be taken, and full opportunity for its discussion would be provided.

THE DECCAN MINING CONCESSION.

Mr. LABOUCHERE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether his attention had been called to the statement in the Times, that appeared on June 7, alleging that the Secretary of State for India contemplates confirming the Hyderabad Deccan mining concession, subject to certain conditions; whether it was a fact that the Nawab Mehdi Ali, the Financial Secretary to the Nizam's Government, had stated that he considered that these terms were inadequate and prejudicial to the Nizam's State, and whether the British Resident at Hyderabad and the Nizam's legal advisers in India had expressed their concurrence with this view; whether, as it appeared from the statement in the Times, Messrs. Freshfield and Williams, who were appointed solicitors for the Nizam's Government on the advice of the Secretary of State for India proposed these terms of settlement to the concessionaires without any sanction from the Nizam's Government, and threatened to throw up the case rather than communicate the Nizam's proposals to the concessionaires; whether one of the grounds urged upon the Nizam's Government by Messrs. Freshfield and Williams, in order that it might give its assent to these terms, was that Mr. Watson, the concessionaire (a gentleman in regard to whom and to his partners the Select Committee of last year on the Hyderabad Deccan Company reported "The concessionaires have used the concession for the purpose of realising great gains not intended to be conferred on them, and that this has been done to the injury of the State from which they obtained the concession, with the assistance of their partner, Abdul Huk"), was a man of such financial influence in the city that his action might weaken the credit of the Nizam's Government should some arrangement approved by him not be come to with him; and whether all the correspondence referred to in the Times as having passed between the Government of Hyderabad and the British Resident would be laid upon the table, and Her Majesty's Government would give the House an opportunity to express its opinion thereon before becoming a party to any final settlement.

Sir W. G. HUNTER also asked whether the arrangement, whatever it may be, which the Secretary of State might sanction would be a final settlement of all matters in dispute and all claims between his Highness the Nizam's Government, the original concessionaires, and the company.

Sir J. GORST: The statement in the Times referred to in the question is premature; the matter is still under the consideration of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State has no official information as to the opinion referred to in the second paragraph of the question; nor is he aware of the various confidential communications which may have passed between the solicitors and agents of the Nizam's in relation to those matters referred to in the third and fourth paragraphs. Until the Secretary of State has arrived at a decision in the matter, it is impossible to say what papers can, with advantage to the public service, be laid upon the table. As to the question of my hon. friend the member for Hackney, it is impossible to say what the nature of the settlement will be until it is arrived at.

NATIVE PRESS.

CRIME IN PATNA.

A correspondent at Patna writes to the Reis and Rayyett:—Patna has been in a state of panic for the last two weeks. Fearful rumours are afloat about murders and dacoits. Sensational reports are flying about like wild-fire. Everybody is suspicious and consequently on his guard. He starts at his own shadow. Terror seems to have seized one and all. They have got grave reasons to explain their conduct. They have not pinned their faith on mere marvels. Dread realities have caused this alarm. I don't mean to say that all the rumours current in the bazaar are "stubborn facts;" of course there is a mixture of actual reality and popular belief, and you can sift the one from the other. Three murders have occurred within a short time, some of them dreadful enough to make one's blood curdle in his veins. Actual cases of travellers being waylaid by armed ruffians have been reported from the interior of the district. Such is the rumour that the dacoits have "pitched upon" Patna as offering a very nice field for one of their "marauding" expeditions. And what is more, all the notorious districts are emptying their ruffians, who are swarming in here from all sides to carry out their nefarious plans. To crown all, the "big men" of this place are putting their dwellings in a regular state of defence, which lends an air of probability to the popular belief. Guns are fired every night to scare away the burglars and to frighten the dacoits. The common people when they see these preparations only shake their heads mysteriously and declare that something awful is about to happen. I have made these remarks to bring your readers up to date regarding the state of affairs up over here.

Of the many rumours current here, the most sensational, and one that is talked about everywhere, is a story connected with one of the many murders mentioned above. It excites one's interest all the more as the heroine is a Hindoo woman. It is a tale of courage and fidelity. There is a halo of romance about it. It shows how even the meek, timid, and much-abused Indian wife can be, as it were, goaded to desperation when she finds her honour at stake. The story runs thus. A bridegroom was returning with his young bride, the fame of whose charms spread far and wide, and, as ill luck would have it, reached the ears of the Native sub-inspector in charge of the nearest police station. The police, as we know, are almost a power in small villages. Everybody is at the beck and call of the "Daroga Saheb." His will is law. Nobody dare disobey him. He is "the monarch of all he surveys." His authority is undisputed. The girl had excited his evil passions. He must have her at any cost. He was determined to catch opportunity by the hair as she passed him by. The night was dark. As the bridal procession passed by an out of the way place, the "police-wallahs" who were on the look-out came down on the party. The bridegroom was accused of kidnapping the bride. In vain did the men who formed the bridal party declare that they were lawfully married, in vain did the bridegroom himself say that the girl was his newly-married bride; the "police-wallahs" turned a deaf ear to their entreaties. Th police suspected crime. The case could not be decided at that very moment and on that very spot. They must be taken to the thannah, and if what they said proved true, they could be set free the next morning. In short, the newly-married couple were locked up in two different cells. Now comes the most sensational part of this story. The bride's state of mind can be better imagined than described. Separated from her husband, locked up in a cell, she was now in the clutches of a set of villains with whom even her honour was not safe. The "Daroga Saheb," on the other hand, was of course in high glee. His plan had succeeded. The girl was now in his power. Success was now certain. He had only to make one more effort. With visions of victory in his head, he entered her cell. She saw the danger of her position at once. Her honour was in peril. She must keep it any risk, though she might die in the attempt. Death, she thought, was better than disgrace. Despair gave her courage. An idea flashed in her mind. Was it not better to throw the scoundrel off his guard? There was a faint glimmering of hope. Her mind was made up. He was armed. She met him with a smiling face, and told him that he would be more welcome without his weapons, which were enough to frighten a tender girl. His passion had got the better of him. He was no more master of his own actions. He did as he was told to do. As soon as he had put down the weapons, quick as thought, the girl flew at his sword. There was a rush—a blow—and a fall! In the twinkling of an eye her tormentor lay dead at her feet. The tables were turned. Just retribution had overtaken her persecutor. It was a terrible revenge. A woman had stained her hands with blood to save her honour!

It is said, and with much truth, that these troubles and crimes are due to scarcity, which is making progress in these districts. One can see easily that these rumours have also much to do with the failure of the crops, which is working dreadful havoc among the poor. The prices of corn have been raised very high by the corn merchants. These men, who are generally of the Bania class, and whose insatiable desire for wealth is proverbial, always hail such a nice opportunity of making money with delight. To them famine is nothing but fortune in a dreadful form. Popular dislike of these men is very great. It is only to frighten these men into terms that the "budmashes" of this place are fomenting the popular excitement and circulating these rumours. The distress is increasing. Grain has gone up higher than its usual rates, depriving many of their daily bread. These poor wretches when they find starvation staring them in the face are naturally driven to these crimes.

KASHMIR.

Kashmir is going to give trouble again. The Maharajah of Kashmir is one of three brothers. He is a helpless imbecile, eaten up by Oriental vices and superstitions—a ready tool in the hand of the worst class of parasites. Under the guidance of these—especially one of them—he allowed the administration of his splendid State to fall into the most hideously rotten condition. Everything bad throve; everything good was suppressed. The Government of India, although morally responsible for the well-being of the thousands whom it had entrusted to the care of the late Maharajah, dared not interfere for the following reason:—

Nothing short of the deposition of the Maharajah could do any good; and, having the condition of the whole of India at heart, the Government did not feel justified in risking so great a shock to the feelings of all the other native chiefs which the deposition of so prominent a ruler as the Maharaja of Kashmir would entail. Things were therefore allowed to proceed from bad to worse, and the Government made no sign, although it was in possession of documents incriminating the half-mad Maharajah, under the influence of his evil favourites, in plots to poison the British Resident, call in the aid of Russia, &c. The Government, in fact, waited on events; and the result may show that it was wise to wait. Opposing evil forces in Kashmir began to produce curious results. Intrigue after intrigue was successful. Ministry after Ministry was overthrown, and the Maharajah's two brothers were always actively scheming for their own advantage. At last a curious crisis arrived. For once all the factions in the State united against the Minister, Dewar Luchman Das, and the British Resident, Mr. Plowden. The latter was abandoned even by the Anglo-Indian Press, who did not appreciate the "stew-in-their-own-juice" policy of the Government of India, and the Mahrajah was emboldened to dismiss his Minister, appointing the more able and ambitious of his two brothers, Prince Amar Singh, Prime Minister. This rendered the position of Mr. Plowden, who had always supported the fallen Minister, untenable; and the entire Anglo-Indian Press insisting that the Foreign Office policy towards Kashmir had been a failure, the Government, after long hesitation, were persuaded to appoint a practical administrator, Colonel Parry Nisbet, to succeed him. This appointment was hailed with enthusiasm by al parties in Kashmir, for Colonel Nisbet is immensely popular with all classes of natives; but, after a while some of them began to repent. Prince Amar Singh, the new Minister, played his cards well. More ambitious and more able than either of his brothers, he recognised the overwhelming strength of the British Government, and, working in concert with the new Resident, managed for a time to lead the Maharajah along the difficult path of administrative reform. Two parties in the State were highly disgusted with the turn which affairs had taken. These were the party of the Maharajah's other brother, Prince Ram Singh, Commander-in-Chief of the Kashmir army, and the party of the Maharajah's unworthy favourites and parasites. It was owing to the machinations of the latter that some more letters, incriminating the Maharajah in various lunatic plots against the British Government, were handed over to the British Resident. The object was, of course, to throw the Maharajah into disgrace, check him in his path of reform; and in the disturbance which was expected to follow the scoundrels calculated upon finding some good chance for themselves.

Now it so happened that, owing to the hostility with which the Foreign Office had viewed Colonel Nisbet's appointment, the latter had not been—as he undoubtedly ought to have been—informed of the secret history of our past relations with Kashmir. He had no idea that the Foreign Office archives contained bundles of just such letters as those betrayed into his hands. The Maharajah was equally ignorant of this; and, when Colonel Nisbet confronted him with his own handwriting, both of them attached a political importance to the revelation which it did not possess, and the Maharajah in despair offered to abdicate. Upon this Colonel Nisbet hurried off, big with the fate of Empire, to Calcutta to the Viceroy, and was not a little chagrined to find himself the bearer of a thrice told tale. Nevertheless, the Government of India saw the advantage which the Maharajah's offer to abdicate placed in their hands, and instructed Colonel Nisbet as to the arrangements to be made for carrying on the government of the country by means of a Council of Regency.

Here a great mistake was made. Having all the winning cards in their hands, the Government ought to have played boldly, and have made a solemn ceremonial of the Maharajah's deposition, at his own request, while the horror of discovery was strong upon him. Then they could have made it impossible for him to seek an early reversal of the change. Government, however, unwisely allowed this revolution to take place quietly; and for a time only paragraphs in the newspapers showed that any change had occured. The Maharajah, who had been expecting the thunderbolt of Imperial wrath to descend upon his head, began to repent of the hasty terror in which he had offered to abdicate. His brother, Prince Ram Singh, began to find that he had lost, rather than gained, by the change, as more power then ever was now thrown into the hands of his more able younger brother, Prince Amar Singh. The friends of the ex-Minister, Dewar Luchman Das, began to gather heart of grace, and to hint to the Maharajah that if his faithful Minister had not been sent away all this trouble would not have occurred. The unworthy favourites of the Maharajah, who had sold their master, began to think that they had acted foolishly, and all the other parties in the State who had previously been able to enrich themselves by intrigue and peculation were naturally hostile to the new era of reform. A coalition against Prince Amar Singh and the British Resident was the result.

The dismissed Minister, Luchman Das, was restored to the Maharajah's favour privately, and he surrendered a box full of other incriminating documents in his possession; and bribes were sent round to the native Press to induce them to say that the famous "letters" revealed to Colonel Nisbet were forgeries. Then the Maharajah's agents began to aver that his offer to abdicate was extorted from him by the British Resident, and the Maharajah himself began to ask why he had been disposed of in this hole-and-corner fashion. He announced his intention of appealing to the Viceroy in Simla in person; and, in spite of the protests of the British Resident—from whom he parted on anything but friendly terms—he has left Srinagar with that avowed purpose. Prince Ram Singh has absented himself from the Council of Regency and accompanied his brother. It will thus be seen that the Kashmir business is far from settled; and, with a half-mad and wholly vicious ruler, surrounded by angry and civil counsellors, unpleasant developements may be expected. The most hopeful feature of the situation is that the Maharajah is a moral coward, and will probably shrink at the last moment from taking any really decisive step.—New York Herald.

THE LATE FATHER J. DAMIEN'S LETTER TO BOMBAY.

The Bombay Gazette publishes a letter written to a Parsee gentlemen in Bombay by the late lamented Father J. Damien, whose devotion to the cause of afflicted humanity culminated in his recent death. The letter will, at the present moment, be read with melancholy interest:—

"Kalawao, Molokai, Sandwich Islands, May 26, 1887.

"Dear Sir,—Your kind letter of the 21st January is to hand, and pressure of work has been the cause of postponing the answer. First, I have unfortunately to state that the report of my cure is an exaggeration of the newspapers. I feel with thanks to the Divine Saviour that there is a great amelioration in my disease under the salutary influence of the Japanese treatment which I have begun since July of last year; and looking at the photograph of your daughter, which shows unmistakable signs of the same disease as we have here, I unhesitatingly advise you to put her under the same treatment as soon as possible. All I can do for you—to get this Japanese medicine—is to give you the address of the doctor whose old family secret is this:—Dr. Goto, Kihai Hospital at Tokio, Japan. It consists in a daily warm bath, in which is dissolved a certain quantity of bathing medicine, called in their language 'Kai-gio-Kioso Yoko Yoiku.' The body up to the shoulders should be in warm water of 95 degrees (Fahrenheit) for fifteen minutes. We take inwardly one drachm of very small pills after each meal. They call them Sei Ketu Reu; and one hour after meal one ounce of decoction from a Japan tree is taken. These two internal specifics are not disagreeable to take, and the warm bath is quite agreeable indeed. They seem to me to purify the blood, reduce smelling, ease the pains occasioned by the degeneration of the small nerves, and in general make a leper feel so comfortable as if he was not sick. I speak here of what I experienced since nearly the beginning of my own treatment. I know very well I am not cured, but I am to-day as strong as I was when I volunteered myself between our lepers fourteen years ago. A year ago I was suffering very much in my feet and right hand, unable to do the slightest fatiguing work, had no sleep at night, and my ear was badly running—to-day remain the big ear, but cured so far, though the anæsthesia (or anæthery) on my left foot is still there. I feel not much fatigue or pain, nor any smelling. We just have finished building in our churchyard a regular bath-house, with a large heater and five bath tubs, where our doctor sends all those who are desirous of submitting themselves under treatment. Hoping you will obtain for your beloved child the same treatment and experience the good effect of it,—I remain, &c., J. DAMIEN.

"P.S.—My respects to the Rev. Father Mayer. Apply to him for the spiritual care of all your family, and Almighty God will bless you."

THE 17TH BENGAL INFANTRY.

A RETRACTATION

The Bhamo correspondent of the Pioneer in a letter of his which appeared in the Pioneer, of 13th March, said:—"When the charge was ordered Lieut. Playfair called to his men to come on, and they followed him splendidly, but when Lieut. Stoddard gave the same call to his command not a Sepoy was to the front, and had it not been for two Hampshire men who sprang from their own ranks and offered to go with him, the ill-fated officer would have stood entirely alone. At the time when this statement was written, says the correspondent in a recent letter, "I fully believe in the truth of this report as it came to me . . . and the story was told with such circumstantiality of detail and complete vraisemblance that I was unfortunately led to accept it and give it currency in your columns. I was prevented by circumstances from seeing the justly indignant denial which was published in your issue of April 23rd by the officer commanding the regiment in Bhamo until very recently, and I now avail myself of the earliest mail to send a complete contradiction of the report given to me by my informants. As I have now ascertained that my information was wholly incorrect, in so far as it reflected on the courage of the Bengal Infantry, I hasten to make the fullest reparation in my power, as I fear that impressions prejudicial to the regiment must have been created in many minds by the paragraph in question. I therefore have to apologise most sincerely to the officers of the 17th Bengal Infantry for the injustice, which most unintentionally I have been the means of doing the regiment.

CAPTAIN TATE, of the 15th Bengal Cavalry, who has recently visited Shiraz and Ispahan, managed to purchase over 300 mules, without striking off the main road into the heart of the country. They cost under Rs. 220 each, and were landed at Karachi, and are reported equal to hard transport work.

THE Ameer's wife and attendants, who lately left Cabul with the intention, as was stated, of joining the Ameer in Turkestan, halted at the Ameer's summer retreat at Pugman, near Cabul, and, when the latest news left, were still there. Nasarulla Jan, the Ameer's younger son, was with his mother.

SIR C. DILKE'S ARTICLE.—"MILES" writes in a Bombay paper:—"I really think that almost too much has been made of Sir Charles Dilke's recent remarks in the Fortnightly Review, disparaging the Bombay and Madras Armies—which he had no opportunity of seeing. So far as I can make out, he saw a Bombay regiment march past in a duststorm in Afghanistan, and on the profound knowledge of the Bombay Army thus acquired he made the sagacious and weighty entries in his journal which he has since given to the world. It is hardly worth while to take Sir Charles too seriously. He strongly reminds one of the English traveller who went to France to study the manners and customs of the French. Landing at Calais he had his pocket picked on the way to the hotel, and when he got to the hotel and retired for the night a red-headed chambermaid gave him his candle. This was too much for him. Before he slept that night he made the following entry in his diary:—'All Frenchmen are thieves, and all Frenchwomen have red hair.' Next morning, having thus found out all about the French, he returned to England to give his countrymen the benefit of his views which, though broad, were the least thing misleading. In like manner it is much better to treat the excellent Sir Charles as a humourist and not put ourselves out about him. He is quite right to praise the Punjab Frontier regiments, which are magnificent. In fact, the Bengal Army has some of the finest regiments in the world, regiments that warm the heart of any soldier to see, no matter to what Presidency he belongs. But while one is glad cordially to recognise this fact, we in Bombay can also look with pride on our own men. Of course some regiments are better than others, but there is a fact in regard to the Native Army that never ought to be lost sight of—a native regiment is what its officers make it. This is really the beginning and the end of the whole matter."

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes :—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole prorietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armie, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JULY 15, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 25th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 23rd June; and from Calcutta to the 23rd June.

THE Council met at Simla on Thursday, June 20th, when the following members were present:—His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, presiding; his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Hon. Lieut.-General G. T. Chesney, the Hon. Mr. A. R. Scoble, the Hon, Sir C. A. Ellictt, the Hon. Mr. P. P. Hutchins, the Hon. Sir D. M. Barbour, the Hon. Mr. R. J. Crosthwaite, and the Hon. Nawab Sir Nawazish Ali Khan.

THE HON. MR. SCOBLE obtained leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the vesting and administration of property held in trust. The Bill was of an unambitious character, its object being to provide in India an officer capable of discharging in regard to certain classes of charities the functions which are discharged in England by the Official Trustee of Charitable Lands and the official Trustee of Charitable Funds, and thus to avoid the difficulty and expense which would otherwise attend the devolution of charitable property.

IT is not likely that the Merchandise Marks Act will be amended; but the Government of India are fully prepared to recommend the Customs authorities to exercise greater discretion in enforcing its provisions.

THE Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne have given their yearly subscription of Rs. 500 to the Countess of Dufferin's Fund.

THE actual route of Prince Albert Victor's tour is not yet settled, but it will probably be from Bombay, through Southern India, and thence by sea to Calcutta, which will be reached about Christmas. After spending a little time there the Prince will go on to Northern India. His Staff will not exceed three or four officers. Sir Edward Bradford will be in charge of the party, and Lord William Beresford, who is now engaged in mapping out the tour, will make all the necessary arrangements in India.

THE Commander-in-Chief will make an extensive tour of inspection in Burma this cold weather. His route will be through Cachar and Manipur to Tammu and the Upper Chindwin.

THE Queen has telegraphed to Lord Connemara thanking him for his exertions on behalf of the distressed people in Ganjam. His Excellency has returned to Ootacamund.

A DESPATCH has been received from the Secretary of State on the Excise question, but no action is likely to be taken in the matter this season.

MR WESTLAND, who was to arrive in Bombay by the mail steamer of July 7th, takes over charge of Assam about the 15th. Mr. Howell proceeds to England on being relieved by Mr. Fitzpatrick.

GENERAL SIR G. WHITE arrived at Simla on June 18th. He has quite recovered from his recent accident.

MR. BUCKLAND, Senior Secretary to the Bengal Board of Revenue, acts as Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department during Mr. Nolan's three months' leave from July 8th.

COLONEL BAILEY of the Forest Department, who was to have officiated for Mr. Ribbentrop as Inspector-General of Forests, is so seriously ill that he will have to take leave to England as soon as he is able to travel. Mr. Hill or Colonel Walker will, therefore, take up the appointment on Mr. Ribbentrop's departure.

COLONEL RIND, now officiating Commissary-General for Transport, will shortly be confirmed in that appointment, vice Colonel Laughton retired.

IT appears that M. Richaud, late Governor-General of Cochin-China, died from cholera and not from heat-apoplexy. M. Richaud died the day after he left Singapore.

MR, OLDHAM, of the Geological Survey of India, who is at Simla at present, is to be deputed to Mergui, in Burma, on geological work.

A DESPATCH from the Government of India to the Secretary of State goes home by this mail acquitting Mr Quin, the Magistrate of Patna, of all blame with reference to the charges brought against him by the Bombay Guardian.

REPORTS from all quarters of India state that the monsoon has come in very quietly.

A CHANGE is to be made in connection with vaccination in India which will be acceptable to the people at large. It is intended gradually to cease using lymph taken from human subjects, and to depend solely upon the calf.

KARACHI is about to build a Women's Hospital in connection with the Countess of Dufferin Fund. The building will cost something like Rs. 40,000, of which a large sum has already been guaranteed by the Municipality and private donations. About Rs. 6,000 per annum have also been promised towards the maintenance of the hospital and staff.

AT a meeting of the Simla Fine Arts Society on June 18th it was resolved to ask the Viceroy to accept the office of President and open the Exhibition the first week in September. Colonel Woodthorpe was appointed Secretary, and Sir Benjamin Simpson, and Colonels Le Mesurier, Ardagh, and Robert Home were added to the Committee. The Principals of the Schools of Art and gentlemen who have interested themselves in promoting the revival of art manufacturers in India will be invited to send specimens of Native wares.

IT is denied that Lord Connemara, Governor of Madras, will relinquish his appointment until his term has expired. H.E. also denies having instituted or contemplated proceedings in the Divorce Court.

A YOUNG Bengalee lady named Miss Mitter has carried off the Bose Scholarship in Anatomy at the Calcutta Medical College, and also stood first in the M.B. examination.

PATRICK GROGAN, a British sailor, who murdered a boy on board the ship Roanoke, has been sentenced at Calcutta to be hanged.

THE Government of India have not yet received any communication regarding the proposal to tax the India beer.

IT is notified that honorary assistant surgeons to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General will for the future be appointed for a term of five years from date of appointment.

SEVERAL bars of silver have been stolen from the Bombay Mint during the past week. Two of the Mint employés have been arrested in connection with the robbery.

THE total number of convicts newly admitted into all jails in the Bombay Presidency was 15,275 (14,398 males and 877 females), against 13,670 (12,823 males and 847 females) in 1887. This is the highest number of admissions in any year since 1883. The increase in crime which these figures represent is ascribed to an unfavourable season and high prices.

TWENTY-THREE mamlatdars who gave evidence as to bribery in the Crawford case have been transferred to other districts.

THE people of Surat complain bitterly of an order that all houses destroyed by the late fire shall, on being rebuilt, be not less than twenty feet in height.

IT has been agreed by the Municipal Corporation of Bombay to reorganise and improve the zoological department at Victoria Gardens.

MR. J. W. HANDLEY, Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Madras, has been promoted to the High Court Bench as acting Sixth Judge.

MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD has been appointed in place of Mr. Justice Kernan, Q.C., Senior Puisne Judge of the Madras High Court.

THE Government of India has increased the allowance to the Burmese ex-Queen Myouk Shwe Yay to Rs. 375 per month, and given her Rs. 1,000 to defray the funeral expenses of her deceased daughter.

THE Amir's Commander-in-Chief, Ghulam Haider Khan, has executed summary punishment upon two Shinwaris who were concerned in the plundering raid on the Afghan camp at Kahi, near Peshbulak. The prisoners were blown away from guns.

THE Amir has appointed agents in India for the purpose of ascertaining the source from which the Indian newspapers obtain news from Kabul.

THE Chor Survey party have returned to Simla, having inspected various sites on the north and south-west slopes. The eastern slope will be surveyed in the autumn.

THE A Khels have recently been giving trouble on the border. Amongst other misdemeanours they murdered two British subjects near Tog.

ON the 14th June another Molienpui chief, Lemboo Lall by name, came to Mr. Murray, the Political Officer at Fort Lungleh, and submitted, promising to render assistance regarding routes for next autumn's operations.

TELEGRAMS from Yunnanfoo to Yungchang, forwarded to Bhamo by letter, state that Ohen-Yu Ying, Viceroy of Yunnan and Kneichan, is dead. The news is believed to be authentic. The Viceroy was of an advanced age, so that his death was expected.

NEWS was received at Bhamo on the 20th June reporting the completion of the Chinese Imperial telegraph system to Momein, which is only about 100 miles from Bhamo. It is not thought probable that the Chinese will extend the line further westward at present.

THE recommendation of the Commissioner of the Patna Division for the construction of the extension of the Tirhoot State Railway from Durbhunga to Baraignia, as a relief work, has been accepted by the Bengal Government.

THE merchants of Madras are of opinion the relief fund for the Ganjam sufferers should not be gone on with.

A DESPATCH has been received from the Secretary of State approving of the action of the Government of India in regard to Kashmir affairs.

THE formal dedication of the new Roman Catholic chapel at Simla will take place on September 29th next. The Archbishop of Agra, assisted by the Catholic Bishops of Allahabad and Lahore will perform the opening ceremony.

MRS. VIBART, the wife of Colonel Vibart, of the 15th Bengal Cavalry, has met with her death at Dalhousie through a riding accident. No one saw the accident, but the lady was found on the road on the evening of June 15th lying insensible, and very severely injured. It is supposed that her horse lost his balance and fell over the khud on to the road below, crushing his rider in the fall. Mrs. Vibart died on the following morning.

MR. F. J. MATTHEWS, of the Calcutta Police Force, committed suicide by poison on June 19th.

PRINCE MAHOMED AMIR SHAH, great grandson of Tippoo Sultan, the founder of the Mysore house is dead.

NOTES

LITTLE news comes to hand by the present overland mail. All that is eventful or important has already been anticipated by the Times and other telegrams which will be found in another column.

THE most satisfactory intelligence is that in Ganjam and other districts threatened with famine rain had fallen, and although scarcity prevailed in several places all apprehension of famine had ceased—cholera had decreased, and the anxiety of the authorities regarding these troubles had subsided.

THE Times correspondents, however, still continue to "interlard" their news with comments of their own, which Anglo-Indian readers at home can well dispense with. The Calcutta correspondent is not so bad as the Rangoon one, who continues more suo to traduce the administrating authorities in Upper Burma and to find fault with all official acts. He has now fallen foul of the military police, who he says have "committed many brutal excesses and grave outrages;" but he does not condescend to give any instances of these.

CAN it be that the gods are getting tired of Olympus? We read that the Viceroy has made two trips to Naldera, and contemplates a third—the charm of going to this out-of-the-way spot being that he thus gets away from the cares of State at Simla. The Commander-in-Chief, too, is said to take himself away from that hill capital as often as possible, and other high officials are following these illustrious examples.

A LOCAL journal is afraid that harm will come to the place if this continues, and complains thus:—"If this tendency on the part of the heads of society to withdraw into the interior is allowed free play we shall shortly be having another exodus question raised in Simla itself." This would be a curious and not very far fetched development of the hill controversy.

WINE, it has been said, is now made of everything, even sometimes of grapes, but what will Mr. Caine and those who follow him in his crusade against fermented liquors in India, say when they learn that it is proposed to utilise jute ends in the preparation of a spirit which much resembles whisky made from grain. By means of sulphuric acid the waste fibre is converted into sugar, and the resulting product is thereafter fermented and distilled!

PRESSURE on our space obliges us to make short our "Notes" and keep back other matter to-day, but we find room for a commentary on a dead man's character which all who had the happiness of knowing him in life will endorse. The Times this morning, in its obituary notice of Sir James Davidson Gordon, contains that commentary:—"A man of exceptional firmness of character, combined with great gentleness of disposition, he won the respect and affection of all with whom he came into contact, and few Anglo-Indians will be more enduringly remembered by their contemporaries than 'Jimmy Gordon,' as his friends loved to call him."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JULY 7.

It is announced from Cashmere that Captain Durand's mission to Gilgit and Chitral left Srinagar on June 24th. Captain Durand will visit also Hunza and Nagar, States within the Cashmere borders, on the southern slope of the Hindoo Koosh. The jurisdiction of Cashmere extends 25 miles into the valley of Bagrot. Beyond is the fort of Chaprot, which is claimed by each of the three States, Gilgit, Hunza, and Nagar. It is hoped that all intertribal disputes may be settled by the mission, and that the tribes may be ultimately utilised for the defence of the frontier. The Cashmere Government will garrison Gilgit with 2,000 soldiers and a mountain battery.

The reorganisation of the feudatory troops is proceeding satisfactorily. Sniders will be issued, so as to enable the troops to commence a course of musketry in the next cold season. A fortified serai at Lundi-Kotal has been completed. It comprises barracks, officers' quarters, and a covered tank holding 60,000 gallons.

General Prendergast has proceeded from Quetta to the Shob Valley with an escort of 100 cavalry to settle some intertribal disputes.

All the defence torpedo-boats have steamed out and arrived at Bombay in good condition.

It is reported that much insubordination has been disclosed at Hyderabad, in Scinde. A large number of men in a certain battery refused to parade in marching order. The men complained that the parades were excessive and oppressive, and they marched out of cantonments without orders, and bivouacked for the night in the open. The matter will be investigated by a Court of inquiry.

The Native troops are making excellent shooting with the Martini-Henry.

Extensive thefts of arms have been carried on for years in Bombay Arsenal. A native barrister having been discovered concealing a sword, his home was searched, and numerous fire-arms and some canon-balls were seized. The evidence shows that the roberies were systematic and concerted. An investigation is proceeding.

Operations will commence in the Lushai country in November. The main object of the expedition will be to connect Chittagong with Burma by a military road. The past policy of punitive expeditions has proved ineffectual. The tribes will now be controlled in a more permanent manner by co-operation from Burma and Chittagong.

The rainfall in Bengal has been general during the week, and food prospects are favourable. In Cuttack all fear of famine is removed. A rainfall of more than two inches is reported in Ganjam, but the food stocks are low. The Government of India has sanctioned the construction of railway earth-works as the best form of famine relief.

Lord Connemara has issued a report recording the results of his recent tour. He found through personal observation that a large amount of distress, amounting to starvation, existed, and that most urgent orders and most prompt action were required if many lives were not to be lost by the most lingering and dreadful of deaths. He also saw that the staff of the district required a better organisation for distribution. The south-west monsoon of 1888 only afforded half a crop, whilst the south-east monsoon was a complete failure. In October the grain riots occurred, and on the 18th of that month famine was reported to be imminent. The anticipated distress is now a reality. In April relief work was afforded to 24,000 persons. The number employed has since diminished, owing, not to any reduction in the distress, but to dread of cholera. It was discovered that 5 per cent. of the people were in an actual state of starvation, and to these gratuitous relief was afforded.

The Governor reminded every officer that he would be held personally responsible that no death occurred from starvation which could be prevented by any exertion or arrangement. Relief works have been established for the able-bodied capable of turning out 75 per cent. of a full day's task, and under a civil agency for the employment of enfeebled labourers. Two of the most important works in progress are the Ganjam-Gopalpore Canal and the Rushikulya project. With a view to the future, 1,000 tons of seed-grain have been purchased and will be cautiously distributed. The medical organisation is reported to be good, and able to deal with the epidemic of cholera. The condition of the cattle is good, and there is no luck of pasturage.

The results of Lord Connemara's visit are satisfactory. The present authorities of the Madras Presidency have taken to heart the lessons of the last great famine. Before he left the district the Governor had Her Majesty's sympathetic message translated into the local vernacular, and the officials gave it wide circulation.

The Assam-Behar Bailway has been opened for traffic.

On Monday last, at a meeting of the Legislative Council in Simla, a Bill was introduced to amend the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. The first important amendment extends the Act to the scheduled districts. The next proposed gives tenants' right to a certain class of farmers who have cultivated waste lands for several years and are at present liable to ejectment. A third amendment provides that lands held rent free in consideration of the performance of certain village duties, cannot be transferred or sold under an execution decree. Section 14 contains an important provision. It was found that in order to prevent cultivators from obtaining tenants' rights the landlord had in many cases entered into a partnership by which he supplied the land and seed-grain, or money, and the ryot cultivated the land. Under this arrangement the ryot could be ejected whenever the contract of partnership was determined. The Bill provides that in all such cases the ryot shall have the rights of an ordinary tenant. A Bill was also introduced to amend the India Steamships Act and the Inland Steam Vessels Act, by enabling the local Governments to delegate the authority to grant certificates.

Proposals have been laid before the Government to establish a mercantile trade-museum in Bombay.

The municipal sweepers of Bombay have imitated the example of the Calcutta bullock-carters. They struck work, and subscribed a sum of money in order to telegraph to the Queen for redress. They all camped out, and ultimately spent the amount subscribed for the telegram in drink. These strikes, coupled with the Congress agitation, illustrate the rapid development of Western civilisation in India. With a little more encouragement and teaching, the art of boycotting will doubtless be universally adopted as the supreme outcome of Western political science.

Application has been made to the Bombay High Court, on behalf of the child-wife of Holkar's son-in-law, to direct a new trial on the charge of cruelty. The case was adjourned. A Bombay newspaper announces two recent marriages. In one case the bride was aged two years and in the other fifteen months, while the bridegroom was thirty years old. Pundita Ramabai is giving a series of lectures to crowded audiences on female education.

A committee of Rajput Sirdars has issued a report on the scheme of social reforms initiated by Colonel Walter in Rajputana fifteen months ago. They have received returns from thirteen States. Out of 194 marriages the rules had only been contravened in thirty-three instances, and the breaches had been punished by fines. Concubinage, opium-smoking, hemp-taking, and the drinking of spirits are condemned. The committee will continue to report annually.

The Secretary of State's despatch on the excise question has been circulated by the local Governments.

A new soldiers' and sailors' home was opened in Bombay by General Budgen on the 1st inst.

Rioting is reported at Bandora between Holi and Chimbai fishermen, eleven being injured. Of the rioters twenty-five were arrested.

A bar of silver has been stolen from the Bombay Mint.

A most extraordinary notification appears in the Bombay Government Gazette of June 27. Authority is given to the clerks of eight magistrates to exercise each the power of the magistrate under the Mamlutdars' Court Act of 1876. This is nothing less than a direct encouragement to bribery and corruption. The highly-paid magistrate sits by with folded arms and draws full pay, while his lowly-paid clerk, with so marked an incentive to honesty, performs a magistrate's duties. It requires no very great amount of sagacity or Indian experience to prophesy the inevitable effect of Government action of this character on the administration of justice. Several Native newspapers write strongly on this subject. One says that corruption has spread far and wide in the Deccan, and is not confined to the magistrates who have confessed. The scandal is so very grave and the conduct of the Bombay Executive is so lamentably deficient in moral force in dealing with this crying evil that the necessity of a commission has become more imperative than ever.

A congratulatory address was recently presented to the Chief Justice of Bengal on behalf of the Native community on his recovery from a serious illness. Sir Comer Petheram expressed his grateful appreciation of the good wishes and sympathy of the Native community.

plished, and the political relations with the tribes improved. It is added that the punishment inflicted upon Lieutenant Stewart's murderers will check further raiding.

CALCUTTA, JULY 14.

The Begum of Bhopal has offered a battery of field artillery, a battalion of infantry, and a regiment of cavalry for frontier defence.

The Bombay Volunteer Artillery has been affiliated with the Royal Artillery and placed under the orders of the officer commanding the Artillery in the Bombay district.

There is a movement among certain military officers to give effect to the suggested settlement of Cashmere by applying to the Government for leave to purchase land and start sheep farms.

It has been decided to build a fort at the mouth of the Zhob Valley. General Prendergast visits the Zhob country at the request of the chief, who desires the Governor-General's agent to mediate between two rival clans.

The commanding officer's despatches on the operations of the Looshai expeditionary force are gazetted. The force receives the appreciative acknowledgments of the Commander-in-Chief and the Government on the successful result of the operations.

At the last meeting of the Legislative Council at Simla the Central Provinces Municipal Bill was introduced. The Village Conservancy Bill was also introduced. The Bill proposes to appoint village committees to decide the amount of money to be raised in each village every year for conservancy purposes. This is purely fanciful legislation, and very unlikely to bear practical fruit.

A great outbreak of fire recently occurred at Surat, when six houses were destroyed. As on the last occasion, the municipal arrangements completely failed.

At the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council, on Saturday, the Mahomedan Burial Board Bill passed, and the Council adjourned sine die.

A good fall of rain is reported from Ganjam. The district officers are engaged in the distribution of seed grain. In addition to Lord Connemara's official minute an interesting account of his tour is published by Mr. Vincent, his private secretary.

The Commissioner of Patna reports that the rains have ended all anxiety as to distress in the Shahabad, Gya, Patna, Sarun, and Chumparum districts. In many parts of India the excessive rain has induced floods. The Bolan, the Hurnai, the Sind-Pishin, and the North-Western lines are breached in many places. The Bolan will be closed for a month. The Indus floods continue. The gauge at Attock registered the flood as over 50 feet. A large extent of country is under water, and great efforts are being made to protect Dera Ghazi Khan. The East Indian Railway have contracted for the construction of a temporary bridge over the Jynthee river till the cessation of the rains.

A representative meeting of members of the uncovenanted services was held at Simla on the 10th. It was resolved further to appeal to Parliament. The committee has issued a minute answering in detail Sir J. Gorst's arguments, and showing that in three cases, at least, the taxpayer is required to make good the deficiency caused by the fall in exchange—namely, salaries and pensions to India Office officials, increased pensions to Royal Engineers, and that portion of the pensions of covenanted civilians subscribed by deduction from salary. The right of appeal to Parliament is reasserted. Varying forms of contract in the absence of written agreements in many cases render appeal impossible to the Law Courts. It is best for all the services to rely more upon the honour and justice of the Government to make good its implied pledges rather than to assume the position of insistance upon a narrow legal contract.

Mr. Justice Jardine, who has been deputed by the Bombay High Court to superintend the administration of justice in subordinate courts, has officially reported to the Chief Justice the illegal reappointment as mamlutdars of seven men guilty on their own confession of bribery and corruption. The grotesque and childish attempt to maintain corrupt magistrates in office by transferring civil jurisdiction to clerks has landed the Bombay Government in this difficulty. A mamlutdar, qua mamlutdar, under provisions of Act 3 of 1876, is entitled to exercise this jurisdiction, so that all this attempt on the part of the Bombay Government to evade giving effect to the spirit of the Secretary of State's order merely degrades jurisdiction without changing it. The Indian public is wondering how long this demoralising tampering with the administration of justice is to be permitted to continue.

The substance of Mr. Ommaney's note on the Crawford case attacking the character of the Parsee community, included in the papers laid before Parliament, has been telegraphed to the Bombay Press. It has created a passionate feeling of indignation throughout the whole Parsee community. A full retractation is called for from the Government and Mr. Ommaney. The Bombay Times writes:—

"If the gross libel has really been laid on the table of the House of Commons it must have been forwarded through the Bombay Government. If Mr. Ommaney does not give sufficient explanation in contradiction of what he is alleged to have written, or if necessary, a formal apology, remonstrance should be sent direct to Lord Reay as the head of Government, who should be asked to see the obnoxious document withdrawn."

A case illustrating the hardship inflicted by Hindoo marriage customs, and the growing feeling of revolt by native women, has been creating considerable interest in Bombay. A young Hindoo widow applied to the magistrate for protection. She stated she was left a widow at nine years of age. She had been cruelly treated by her relations, and had determined to re-marry, but all her caste people threatened her with persecution. The magistrate referred her with an introductory letter to Madhowdas Rugnathdas, the famous Hindoo social reformer, who not only provided her with shelter, but arranged for her re-marriage in his own house. This is the twenty-eighth widow whom he has enabled to re-marry, sixteen of these marriages having taken place under his roof. A large number of Hindoos were present at the marriage.

The Hyderabad Government takes over at once as a mortgage from Abdul Huk some house property in Bombay, valued at about 20 lakhs, as part security to cover 24 lakhs, the value of the shares sold by Huk to the Nizam. This is not to waive the Nizam's legal claim to these same shares on the ground that when Huk obtained them secretly from the concessionaires he was the Nizam's agent. This legal point will probably be decided by the Bombay High Court.

It is reported from Madras that the crushing in the Mysore mines last month resulted in a total output of 4,275 ounces—namely, 3,917 from 2,367 tons of quartz, and 358 ounces from the tailings.

A herd of 100 wild elephants has been captured in Mysore by Superintendent Sanderson.

The area irrigated in Scinde last year was 56,464 acres more than in the previous year.

The deaths by snake bites in the North-West Provinces last year were 6,000. In Madras 10,096 cattle were killed by wild animals, and the loss of human life by snakes and wild animals was 1,642.

Universal regret is expressed by the Press at the death of Sir Salar Jung. He leaves an heir a few weeks old. No political importance, however, is attached to the sad event.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, JULY 7.

A rebellion against the Ameer's authority is reported to have broken out in the province of Badakshan, and the rebels, it is added, have seized and imprisoned various officials. Troops have been ordered up from Mazar-i-Sherif and reinforcements from Cabul. It is believed that the Ameer will have little difficulty in suppressing the rebellion. His regular troops at Mazar-i-Sherif are armed with breechloaders, whilst the Badakshis carry very inferior weapons; besides which, by long subjection, the military instincts of the tribes have been destroyed. By reason of extreme poverty the race has greatly degenerated.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JULY 7.

Sir C. Crosthwaite has left Magwe for a tour through the Toungdwingee division, which is at present the most disturbed in Upper Burma. It has been found necessay that the Chief Commissioner should be escorted by a column of troops, commanded by Brigadier-General Symons. Notwithstanding the fact of its being the rainy season, it has been decided to send reinforcements of European mounted infantry to strengthen the military police in Magwe. These troops are likely to suffer severely from exposure during the rains. The Magwe military police battalion, which was raised in Bombay, has proved almost useless. The Magwe, Yau, and Minbu districts are still troubled by dacoits. In a skirmish in Yau fifteen dacoits were killed, our loss being two killed.

Nothing fresh is reported from the Chin frontier. Major Raikes remained in Fort White. The Chins have not submitted, and are apparently showing no signs of doing so.

Brigadier-General Stedman, Inspector-General of Police, recently left Burma for Australia, on leave, being replaced during his absence by Mr. Jameson, Senior Deputy Inspector-General. Mr. Jameson died suddenly last week, and the command of the police force has now fallen into the hands of Major Somerset Graves, Deputy Inspector-General of Military Police, an officer who, since his arrival in Burma, has done excellent service.

The Mandalay Herald publishes full and detailed accounts of two instances of misconduct by policemen. A body of thirty policemen raided, on May 30, into Yogan, a village in the sub-division of Myitlha, in the Kyoukse district. The police, who were commanded by Burman officers, are alleged to have plundered the village and treated the villagers most brutally. On June 30, Kone, a village in Myingyan, was visited by another party of police, also commanded by a Burman officer. On a villager's failing to produce certain dacoits whom the police demanded, he was frightfully flogged by them. In consequence of the minute details given by the Mandalay Herald, the local Government will have no difficulty in fully investigating these cases.

The necessity for the appointment of a judicial commissioner in Upper Burma, to supervise the inferior tribunals, becomes daily more urgent. No permanent and definite pacification of the upper province can be looked for until the administration of justice has been improved.

RANGOON, JULY 13.

The Katha district, south of Bhamo, has been disturbed by a band of dacoits some 500 strong, under a new leader. Numerous petty skirmishes with dacoits are reported from various districts in the Upper Province. In Myingyan, two Bohs, who had given much trouble, have been captured. Somewhat serious outbreaks have occurred at Yetaga, where Boh Ngatoke, recently captured, was confined awaiting trial. He and other prisoners attempted to escape. The police fired into them, killing Ngatoke and wounding two others. Two policement severely wounded.

The Chins remain defiant, and continue to harass the environs of Fort White. They recently killed a sapper engaged in road-making.

Captain Shaw, of the Leicestershire Regiment, who had recently returned from the Chin Hills, has died of dysentry at Myingyan.

The Chief Commissioner arrived yesterday at Yenanyoung, after marching with a strong escort through the Magwe and Toungdwingyi districts. No details of his tour have been received.

The increase in the salt duty has almost extinguished the preparation of the Ngapee species of salt-fish, very largely consumed by the Burmese. This manufacture formed one of the principal Native industries of the province. Large numbers of persons were employed in its manufacture. Ngapee is now replaced by salt-fish imported from the Straits Settlements, which is admitted duty free.

Several trades in Upper Burma are greatly checked by the extent to which native carts are forcibly requisitioned by military police for carriage supplies. Whole districts are left without means of transport. The allowing bodies of military police, who are unable to speak or understand any language spoken by the people, to go about unaccompanied by any European officer has caused most serious injury, and is seriously retarding the pacification of the Upper Province. There can be no doubt that when unaccompanied by European officers the military police have committed many brutal excesses and grave outrages. I referred in a recent telegram to the inquiry being held by the Government at Mandalay into the case of a woman on whose face offensive words have been tattooed, it is alleged, by order of a European police officer. The Rangoon Times and Mandalay Herald announce that this woman has been discovered at Myingyan. She is to be sent to Mandalay. The Rangoon Times of to-day further states that both the woman and the man who tattooed her allege that the outrage was committed by order of an officer of police. The inquiry is still proceeding. A serious feature in the case is that the police in the Myingyan district appear to have taken an active part in concealing the woman.

An interesting question affecting the military status of Volunteers has arisen in Rangoon. The military authorities are claiming some houses in cantonments from which they allege they are entitled to expel non-military tenants. Some of the persons occupying these houses are commissioned Volunteer officers. The question arises whether they are non-military tenants.

The rainfall up to date is seriously deficient.

INDIA.

BOMBAY, JULY 10.

The Begum of Bhopal has offered a battery of field artillery, a regiment of cavalry, and a battalion of infantry for the defence of the North-West Frontier.

SIMLA, JULY 11.

A meeting of officials belonging to the uncovenanted services has been held here, at which the recent debate in the Imperial Parliament in reference to the services was discussed, and a resolution was passed declaring that the agitation would be continued. A vote of thanks to Sir Roper Lethbridge and other members of Parliament who supported the claims of the uncovenanted service was also adopted.

Artillery, cavalry, and district camps will be formed during the coming winter at Gurgaon, Roorkee, Guzranwalla, Rawul-Pindi, Mian-Mir, Umballa, Meerut, and Lucknow.

THE QUETTA RAILWAY.

BOMBAY, JULY 10.

The floods have caused a breach in the Hurnai Railway beyond Quetta. Traffic has been stopped on this side of Kilia Abdula.

DEATH OF SIR SALAR JUNG.

BOMBAY, JULY 8.

The death is announced of Sir Salar Jung, Prime Ministe of Hyderabad.

Sir Salar Jung, K.C.I.E., who was twenty-six years of age, was the son of the famous Prime Minister of the Nizam, who rallied the Mahomedans of India to the support of British rule in 1857. For a short time Sir Salar filled the high post formerly occupied by his father, whose political sentiments he shared. The deceased is well remembered in London, where he represented his people in the Jubilee year, occupying the house of Lord Howard, at Rutland-gate. During his visit to England two years ago Sir Salar published in the Nineteenth Century two papers, which attracted much attention, pointing out the danger to Mahomedans in India of any Russian advance to the Bosphorus. Sir Salar Jung's hospitality at Hyderabad to English travellers was unbounded. He filled the highest rank among the Native nobles as Mooktar ul Mulk and Imad-as-Sultanat.

FLOODS ON THE INDUS.

CALCUTTA, TUESDAY.

The Indus has overflowed its banks, and forty persons are reported to have been drowned at the town of Larkhana, which is seven miles west of the river.

The country is ten feet under water, and the main line of the North-Western Railway is in serious danger.

GANJAM.

We have received from the India Office the following copy of a telegram from the Government of Madras, dated July 9:—

"Condition Ganjam, for the week ending July 6. Good rain fallen (average of 19 stations 3·42 inches), consequently prospects greatly improved. Numbers on large famine relief works, 7,331; on small works, 8,094; on gratuitous relief, 30,070. Number of relief circles, 44.

"Imports of grain, by land 330, by sea 463 tons. Seed grain purchased by Government is being rapidly distributed and eagerly received. Deaths from cholera, 602."

THE Englishman asks:—Whatever is to become of the recommendations of the Public Service Commission? It is high time something was done with the report. It was wearing on two years since Lord Dufferin appointed the Commission, and, as far as regards any practical result, it might never have been in existence.

THE statement that Sir Frederick Hogg will not return to India may be taken, says a Calcutta paper, "with a grain of salt. He has gone home on three months' leave, and certain personal circumstances may induce him to take six months' special leave; but beyond this we have good reason to believe that everything is mere guess-work. Sir Frederick has not previously taken special leave during the whole of his service. With regard to the present incumbent, our Allahabad contemporary ought to know better than to call him the 'officiating Postmaster-General.' As acting Director-General, Mr. Fanshawe has certainly won golden opinions, and that not merely within the Department."

GOVERNMENT have addressod a circular letter to all departments, directing the heads of offices to point out to European and Eurasiân clerks serving under them that if they qualify as efficient volunteers they will be eligible, though they are civilians, to receive medals should they be fortunate enough at any time to accompany an army on field service. In the absence of such qualification, civilians, not being volunteers, even though they may go through actual field service, would not be eligible to be granted war medals.

THE formal dedication of the new Roman Catholic chapel at Simla takes place on the 29th September next. The Archbishop of Agra, assisted by the Bishops of Allahabad and Lahore, will perform the opening ceremony on St. Michael's day, exactly two years after the date on which the foundation-stone was laid. Meanwhile, to avoid the rains in the old chapel, it is proposed to use the new building—if it can be made ready—from the first Sunday after the Feast of the Sacred Heart. The old building will probably be used for a school, as the Archbishop is unwilling to sell the property.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

MILITARY DIARY.

(Englishman.)

There is an intention on the part of Government to abolish regimental messes in Burma, and substitute station messes. The change will be a welcome one to all, except Commanding Officers. The object of establishing a regimental mess is to have a place of meeting for the officers of the regiment where they can exchange ideas and form friendships free from the restraints that encompass them on duty, and also to insure all officers living in a manner suitable to their social status. A public opinion is formed in a large mess which gives great assistance to the maintenance of discipline and gentlemanlike behaviour among officers, but in a small mess no public opinion can exist, and a most objectionable form of dictation by seniority is enforced, most detrimental to discipline and good feeling. One constantly hears of Bengal regiments where the dining members are the Colonels of thirty years' service and the probationers of two, and in such cases pleasant social feeling is, of course, impossible. Or three or four lads form the mess, taking their tone from each other, with the usual result of irregular costumes and broken furniture. But allowing for the best constituted mess—a mess where there are five or six officers dining regularly—it does not in any way carry out the functions for which Government assists it. A Bengal Cavalry or Infantry mess is not large enough to be a place of pleasant social intercourse, or in which a young officer can be trained in the ways of the world. It is not a place where public opinion is formed, for in most regiments the mess, though paid for by the officers, is virtually the Colonel's own property; he talks about "my" mess, and manages it as he pleases, and any officer venturing to hint that the officers who paid for it should be consulted would, in many cases, be accused of want of proper deference to the Commanding Officer.

It would be hard to say at what period the messes of Bengal regiments began to go off the rails, but most officers agree that at the present time the messes are managed on false principles. For the married Colonel the mess is an excellent institution, for it places at his disposal whatever social qualities the officers of a regiment possess; indeed, in many it is social capital of a most satisfactory kind. If friends of the Commanding Officer wish for amusement the officers are directed to furnish it, and as quarrelling with a Commanding Officer is fatal to professional advancement, there is no other course open but to dance, sing, play, pay, and look merry. When the Colonel is a dining member of the mess, where it consists of only five or six members, he must necessarily, in so small a community, be lawgiver of the most autocratic kind on all subjects. On this very subject of the advisability of establishing station messes it would be very difficult to arrive at the opinion of officers of regiments. The Colonel naturally thinks the mess an admirable institution, as it is always pleaseant to have a place where a man's wishes are implicitly complied with, where subjects personally unpleasant are never discussed, and where the weakest jokes are met with a flattering hilarity. The way in which the institution is managed, be it parsimoniously or extravagantly, is no doubt, in the opinion of the manager, all that can be desired, and the mess is an excellent means of preserving a proper spirit of discipline and subordination among the officers. Commanding Officers would be false to their human nature if they gave as their opinion that Bengal messes were managed on wrong principles; a few who feel the intolerable irksomeness of the present mess society would elect for station messes, but the numbers would be few—the great majority would doubtless vote for a continuance of the present state of affairs. If the officers should be asked, they have to put down on paper their dislike to the manner in which the mess is managed, and go diametrically against the loudly expressed wish of the man who has the making or marring of their fortunes in his own hand. The "happy family" mess exists only in the imagination of novel writers, for it is almost an impossibility to meet four or five men thrown together promiscuously who can breakfast, lunch, and dine with each other every day without quarrelling. In a chummery, where men elect to live together drawn by the ties of personal friendship and similarity of tastes, disagreements and misunderstandings are by no means uncommon; the situation is strained to breaking when the four or five men have no ties of friendship, when their ages vary so as to make common pursuits an impossibility, and when their duty compels them to censure each other.

In theory the Bengal regiments' messes are supposed to be managed by Mess Committees, in practice it is quite the exception to find a regiment where the Committee have any kind of vote in the management of the mess, and their duty resolves itself into signing the quarterly accounts, while the Mess Secretary carries out the Colonel's orders. Every advantage now gained from single regiment messes would be increased if station messes were formed. The sooner the Bengal Cavalry understand that their interests are identical with Bengal Infantry the better for all. In the old days there was much the same feeling of estrangement between the Horse and Field Artillery, but the establishing of station messes had an excellent effect. It is the desire of every right feeling officer that young officers should be saved from debt and trouble. With this object wealthy officers have to cut down their expenses in a small regimental mess as far as possible, and live in a way far from agreeable to them, in order to suit the young officer's income, yet notwithstanding their personal sacrifices the expenses of a numerically small mess are so great that it is almost impossible to keep down the bills. The loss on leaving stations in stores and furniture, the carriage on the march, the rent of Mess House, the mess guests, the book and billiard clubs, all mount up to a sum which a young officer in debt is not justified in spending, but from which no self-denial can save him.

With the allowance received from Government smaller handsome mess houses might be furnished and maintained in every station on exactly the same footing, but on an increased scale to those now kept up for the Artillery, and regiments marching would have a small camp kit such as is now kept up by batteries. All officers of the Indian list would be members of the mess, including Staff, Commissariat, Accounts, Medical and Civil employ, and all the regimental officers would be obliged to use the mess, and doubtless many of the other officers would be only too glad to have a mess of their own. At most large stations this would give a mess of some thirty dining members, and with that number an excellent establishment could be maintained, a pleasant place of meeting would be added to the station, young officers would have small mess bills, and find their level better than they do at present in the miserably isolated little regimental messes, and the officers of the Indian service generally would lead a very different and much pleasanter life. At present they form half the community in an Indian station, but through want of attention to the old fable of the bundle of sticks have little to say to the amusements or public opinion of the stations where they are quartered. There is no difficulty in establishing such messes if the initial objection of Commanding Officers can be surmounted, for the papers connected with Artillery station messes contain all arguments pro and con, together with the necessary details for transfer of mess house, stock, &c.

AN UNSETTLED DISTRICT.

(Englishman.)

The district of Dehra Dun, although, perhaps, one of the loveliest places throughout the length and breadth of India, seems to be in a singular unfortunate state as regards the settlement of its Land Revenue. During the last seventy years there have been no less than eight settlements, some of which seem to have been drawn up in the wildest manner possible, one going to such lengths as actually to regard the ryots as proprietors of the land they rented. The eighth and last of these settlements (which is to be in force for only twenty years) has been conducted by Mr. Ross, an officer who adds to his unrivalled knowledge of the district and its inhabitants by his zealous efforts to develop the natural resources of the country, he having been instrumental in introducing sericulture into the district, which seems to be peculiarly suitable for the rearing of silk-worms. Mr. Ross deserves great praise for the very satisfactory manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office, in spite of the many and great difficulties which lay in his path, such as the total untrustworthiness, in certain districts, of the patwari papers, and the utter impossibility of fixing any uniform standard of assessment. He has, however, succeeded in raising the revenue by over 60 per cent., and that without in any way harassing the zemindars or their tenants, and at the same time securing a fair revenue to Government. This settlement is deserving of notice, inasmuch as it affords the first instance of systematic assessment of forest lands. As these are assessed at over one-ninth of the total revenue, and are expected to prove very much more valuable by the next settlement, we may, perhaps, see the same example followed in other districts.

THE SIKKIM DIFFICULTIES.

(Statesman.)

The delay in coming to a settlement with Tibet, probably arises from a fact that is generally overlooked. The negotiation has practically, we believe, been taken out of the hands of the Indian authorities altogether, and is being conducted by the Home Government—direct with the Government of Pekin. There are many complications in our present relations with China besides this Sikkim one, and the Chinese Court will show no haste in settling the Sikkim difficulty, if it can use it for the attainment of its own ends on the Burma frontier, and the reception and just treatment of its emigrants in the Australian colonies. In the background moreover, there is the opium question; and beyond that the rival claims of Russia upon the east coast of China and in Formosa. Thus there is reason, we think, to suspect that the Sikkim question is purposely held in abeyance, and that the Amban and Mr. Hart are simply instructed to "wait orders," pending the negotiations going on in London between the Foreign Office and the Chinese Ambassador, for a settlement of all our relations with China. If we are right in these speculations, we may as well dismiss the Sikkim question from further consideration. It will not be settled here but in London. The Amban and Mr. Hart will remain where they are until our relations with China generally are settled, when the Sikkim business will give no difficulty whatever. These are but vaticinations of our own, but we suspect there is truth in them.

GROUPING OF VILLAGES IN BURMA.

(Mandalay Herald.)

Now, as a matter of fact, there has been a most unjustifiable and real amount of distress, and avoidable distress too, introduced into more than one of our district and rural populations, by that to us absolutely unaccountable policy, which has been called the Government grouping of villages. Village populations have been foisted out of their old centres of life and forced to go to some other spot or locality, without the slightest regard being paid for the loss of livelihood that became inevitably consequent by such arbitrary changes. Villagers who had for generations depended on a certain occupation, which the locality of their old villages enabled them to follow, have been almost ruthlessly, and certainly stupidly, removed to other sites which made the pursuit of the only occupation they earned their bread by impossible in the future, or so inconvenient as to amount to the same thing. We have shown in a previous issue in detail how this mad grouping of villages in the Shwebo district has seriously impaired one of the largest and most profitable export trades of Upper Burma. This particular policy of the local Government has produced so much of real distress, that it of itself would be worthy of publicity in the House of Commons. But having been fused into the general term of distress it has been lost sight of, and is now buried under the cold stones of official differences. Under all the circumstances of the case we cannot but think, though we thank him for the interest he has shown in and for us, that Mr. Bradlaugh has been too premature in bringing the administration of Upper Burma before the House of Commons which is composed of more members who are more ignorant of Burma than they are of India proper.

THE PROPOSED COLONY IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

No one would welcome more cordially than we should do, any practical scheme for the establishment of a colony composed chiefly or exclusively of Europeans and Eurasians, anywhere on the healthy uplands of India; but the idea that such a colony is to be in any way the result of a march of troops overland from India to Burma next cold season is absurd in the extreme. The fact is that if such a colony is ever to be started with success, it must be recruited from quite other elements than retired officers. If there is to be a successful European colony in India, the first settlers must be drawn from a different source than that of retired Indian officers. The families must be those who leave behind far less comfort and luxury than even the poorest Indian officer's household is accustomed to. But the young men may be drawn from any rank of life. A youth who is worth anything at all is ready to rough it, and standing alone he may prosper in such a settlement, while the man encumbered with a delicately nurtured wife and a family of children would almost certainly go to the wall and end by giving his children a very poor start in life indeed. Well educated in any centre of civilisation they have the world open to them; but brought up in a colony, probably almost entirely uneducated, their prospects would be black indeed, should they not succeed as farmers.

LEPER SEGREGATION.

(Indian Daily News.)

The High Priest of Baidynath has submitted to the Government of India his suggestions for a system of leper segregation, which shall avoid hurting the religious susceptibilities of Hindoos; and the Legislative Department is engaged at Simla in drafting a Bill, with the object of separating these afflicted people from the general healthy community. The precise terms, either of the High Priest's suggestions or the Government of India's proposals, are not yet known. We trust no half-measures are contemplated, but that the Government will provide for and insist upon a system of thorough segregation of all lepers from the general population. It has been suggested that the Government will accomplish sufficient for a commencement if the segregation of pauper lepers alone is made compulsory. But we should be better pleased to see all lepers, of whatever class or caste, brought within the scheme. Otherwise, the protective measures will only be half complete, and the spread of leprosy will not be prevented. Distinctions would be necessary, no doubt. But no insuperable difficulty need be apprehended on that score. If necessary, separate institutions could be provided for lepers of superior social positions who could themselves, or by the help of their friends, afford to pay for better accommodation than that provided by Government in the ordinary asylums—in the same way that there are private lunatic asylums in England. Mr. Edward Clifford, writing in the Nineteenth Century recently on the subject of a visit he had paid to Father Damien, the leper martyr, and the Molokai Leper Settlement, says:—"I did not find one person in the Sandwich Islands who had the least doubt as to leprosy being contagious." Poor Father Damien's sad fate should of itself serve as a sufficient warning to the Government and the people of India against the consequences of permitting the hundreds, if not thousands, of horribly afflicted lepers in Calcutta alone to move about as they do, freely handling articles of food on hawkers' stalls, and coming into constant contact with the healthy population. It is bad policy and mistaken kindness to the lepers themselves to permit this. The leper's lot, confined to a leper settlement, need not be an unhappy one. They may be made miserable enough, of course, by neglect. But if the Government does its duty, as we have no doubt the Government of India would do, the leper settlements may be made pleasant places and their occupants as happy and contented as their terrible affliction will permit.

THE TIMES BURMA CORRESPONDENT.

(Pioneer.)

If we are to have fiction where honest men would prefer fact, it is well that the fiction should be amusing. Mr. Moylan's telegrams to the Times regarding the State of Burma, for instance, were as dull as they were inaccurate; but the announcement that the Indian Mirror "is making arrangements for placing the British public in possession of the full details of Sir Charles Crosthwaite's administration," justifies the hope that Mr. Moylan is to have a successor who will relieve Munchausen with the Malaprop. "So long," says the article in the Indian Mirror in which this announcement is made, "as Mr. Moylan was a hostile witness, it was not quite easy to march off prisoners in a file to the place of execution, photograph the unhappy group, and then to blow off their brains in a general fusilade. But with Mr. Moylan no longer able to give evidence, the civil and military authorities, who are making and shaping the destiny of Upper Burma in their own way, have returned to their high jinks, and with greater relish for Burmese blood than the witches of old shared over their boiling cauldron." From which first instalment of instructive information the British public will learn, what they certainly never knew before, that the witches of old had an intimate acquaintance with Burmese blood, and that whereas milder conquerors are content to blow off the heads of their victims, the dire malevolence of Sir Charles Crosthwaite aims at their brains—which to those with whom the commodity is scanty must clearly be evidence of a much deeper malignity. Among the various sensational stories lately circulated with a view to discredit the administration of Upper Burma, was one regarding Brigadier-General Collett's operations in the Eastern Karenni country. It was alleged that the troops, both British and native, dug up the cemeteries at Sawlon, exhumed 150 bodies and looted the graves. Such a charge reflected, of course, upon the officers who were in command of the various detachments as well as upon the soldiers themselves, and it was cunningly made long after the force had been broken up, and General Collett and Mr. Hildebrand, the Political Officer, had gone to England on leave. We have been at the pains to ascertain what really occured at Sawlon, and on the authority of responsible officers can offer the most unqualified contradiction to the charges made against the troops. The facts, which were perfectly well known to everyone in the Column at the time, were that some of the Shan population resident in Sawlon knowing the graves in which treasure was deposited, organised a night raid upon the Karenni cemeteries. Some of their countrymen who had been hired for transport work were believed to have aided them, but it was impossible to identify the thieves. When the case was reported, the morning after the graves had been opened, Mr. Hildebrand issued a notice that any offender caught would be summarily dealt with, and the Shan bullock-drivers with the force were warned that sharp punishment would be awarded to them if they were caught looting. There the matter rested, and no further raid was made on the cemeteries. From the day of their arrival at Sawlon the men in the Column were forbidden to leave the camp except on duty, as General Collett and Mr. Hildebrand were most anxious to reassure the local Karennis. There were frequent roll-calls to ensure this order being respected, and the behaviour of the troops was excellent in every way. The worst feature in connection with this slanderous story is that it should have been concocted at a time when reference to those who conducted the operations against Sawlapaw means a delay of at least two months.

BENGAL.

(June 23.)

THE latest report by the Commissioner of the Patna division on the scarcity in that part of the country shows that symptoms of distress have increased somewhat alarmingly, in spite of the falls of rain. The number of persons employed on relief works increased in a fortnight from the previous report, from 32,752 to 46,000, and an increase of gratuitous relief is also found necessary. The Commissioner strongly recommends the construction of a railway from Durbhunga to Sitamarhi, and Government sanctions the carrying out of the earthwork.

INDIGO prospects in Bengal have considerably improved during the last week, owing to good rain having generally fallen, except in Midnapur, and even there rain has been reported during the last two days. The rain, however, has come somewhat late, and it is not expected that the outturn will equal last year's. In Purneah and Bhaugulpur there has also been good rain, and there has been a general fall in most parts of Behar, where prospects are now considered fairly satisfactory. It is stated that one or two concerns have already opened vats, but as the crop is backward, manufacture will not be general before July. In Benares and the North-West rain has fallen at some factories, while it is much wanted in others.

ACCORDING to a correspondent, the sufferings of the people of the Diamond Harbour sub-division are simply indescribable. Most of the inhabitants in Debipur and adjoining villages are living upon one meal a day. Some of them have, for three or four days, been taking only dates and boiled tamarind seeds. In some places husbands have abandoned their wives and fathers their children, leaving them to beg from door to door. Wherever one goes, his ears are assailed by heart-rending scenes. There have been several cases of death, but unfortunately no one takes any notice of these things. Five men in the villages of Narainpur and Chundypur, belonging to the Government khas mehals, died of starvation or from taking unwholesome food. The people are getting emaciated for want of sustenance; the females have no clothes to put on; to all these add cases of premature death.

TREASURE of the value of about a lakh of rupees has just been found in the family vaults of the Addays, in an obscure village situated in the sub-division of Jehanabad, Bengal. The Hooghly Court Sheriff was deputed to make the search for it, and performed his duty with complete success.

A CALCUTTA paper states that the Municipal loan of five lakhs, tenders for which were opened on Wednesday afternoon, was in much request. 113 tenders, aggregating Rs. 39,26,600, were received, of which 61 tenders for Rs. 26,67,000 were at 105 or upwards. Rs. 105-13 was the lowest successful tender, and the highest was at 108.

IT is notified that in the calendar year 1890 not more than 57,000 chests of Bengal opium will be offered for sale, and not more than 4,750 chests in each month of the year. Of the quantity to be offered for sale in each month not more than 2,500 chests will consist of Benares, and not more than 2,250 chests of Patna opium, and no reduction will be made in this quantity without three months' previous notice.

THE jail buildings in Bengal have to pay annually a sum of Rs. 15,734 as municipal taxation, but the Lieut.-Governor points out that, in other provinces where the octroi duty is enforced, all articles required for consumption in jails are exempted from this duty, and therefore the cost of the prisoners is less. This shows the difficulty of accurately comparing the cost of the maintenance of prisoners in the different provinces without some definite rules as to the charges to be made in the accounts.

THE Zemindar Panchayet, a landholders' association on the panchayet basis, has been formed in Bengal. Its object is to bring about the amicable settlement of all disputes between owners and tenants, for which purpose branches are to be formed in the chief mofussil towns and villages, whilst the head office of the association will be established in Calcutta. The Panchayet will undoubtedly be the means of promoting good relations between zemindar and ryot; and it should also prevent those wild plunges into litigation that oftener than not result in the partial or complete ruin of those who engage in it

MADRAS.

(June 23.)

HIS Highness the Maharajah Holkar has given Rs. 3,000 for the relief of the people in Ganjam, and Rs. 7,000 for distribution amongst the poor people and institutions of Madras.

THE Governor has received the following telegram from London:—

"Balmoral, 13th.—The Queen-Empress of India appreciates your endeavours to alleviate the distress in Ganjam, and desires that no efforts may be spared. Her Majesty deeply sympathises with the sufferings of her people in that district."

THE message from the Queen-Empress has given great satisfaction to the people.

LORD CONNEMARA has returned to Madras, having spent a fortnight in the Ganjam district, and minutely inspected all the worst portions—that is, where the distress has been most acute.

THE merchants of Madras do not encourage the opening of a relief fund for Ganjam, where, in consequence of recent rain, it is believed that matters are likely to take a favourable turn. The distress is at any rate restricted within well-defined limits, and so long as there is a sufficient stock of food, labour and money can be supplied by the authorities to buy it. The great merit of the codes which were the outcome of the Famine Commissioners' inquiry is that they have put an end to the labour famines, which were really more disastrous than the failure of crops. There was food at a man's door, but he could not afford to buy it. He could not even find a market for his own labour. For the failure of crops means the failure of harvest operations, and the temporary cessation of any demand for the sickle or the arm that wields it. The organisation in Ganjam for the supply of work is, as it has been in Bengal, excellent and effective, and the visit of the Governor in so trying a season has stimulated every official to use his utmost exertions to fight against the difficulties of the present season.

BY the retirement of the Hon. Mr. Justice Kernan, Q.C., the Senior Puisne Judge of the Madras High Court, the High Court Bench, writes the Madras Mail, was left with only five judges, and it was feared that the opportunity would be taken of doing away with the temporary sixth judgeship; but we understand that, on the recommendation of his lordship the Chief Justice, Government has decided upon continuing to employ the services of an Acting Sixth Judge, as it is found to be almost impossible for only five judges to cope with the work of the court. Mr. Justice Sheppard has, we learn, been appointed to act in place of Mr. Justice Kernan, and Mr. J. W. Handley, the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, has been promoted to the High Court Bench as Acting Sixth Judge. It was originally thought that, if this arrangement was effected, Mr. W. M. Scharlieb, the Senior Presidency Magistrate of Black Town, would be appointed to act for Mr. Handley in the Small Cause Court; but we now understand that Government has appointed Mr. P. D. Shaw, the Acting Crown Prosecutor, to act as Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, while Mr. Willie Grant, Barrister-at-Law, becomes Acting Crown Prosecutor. Mr. Scharlieb, who is over sixty years of age, and was granted by Government an extension of service "until further orders," has on several previous occasions acted as Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, while Mr. P. D. Shaw has, on one or two occasions, acted as Presidency Magistrate, in the absence of Mr. Scharlieb.

BOMBAY.

(June 25.)

THE Bombay Chamber of Commerce have addressed Lord Reay relative to impurities in Indian wheat. They state that it is absolutely incorrect to say that the wheat exported from Bombay has 4 per cent. of admixture. The exporters maintain that the refraction is only 2 per cent. Liverpool deals with three-fourths of the Bombay wheat trade and London one-fourth. The trade is gradually improving, and is susceptible of further immediate and accelerated improvement.

SEVERAL of the leading English insurance offices received telegrams on Wednesday from London to the effect that the committee of offices there have reduced the rates on cotton mills in India by about 25 per cent. This will be welcome news to the Bombay millowners, who have been complaining for some time past that they have not shared in the general reduction in rates which has been going on here for some time past.

THE local police have been actively engaged during the last two or three days in investigating a daring robbery of several bars of silver, which was committed at H. M.'s Mint in the early part of last week. It seems that the silver was removed from the strong room in broad daylight, but how it was passed out of the melting room—in which nearly one hundred men are constantly employed—and the other departments is a com plete mystery; indeed, the Mint authorities do not recollect a robbery enshrouded in so much mystery over having been perpetrated there before. Two of the Mint employés have been taken into custody, and the police are leaving no stone unturned in their efforts to discover the thief or thieves.

DR. BLANEY, the coroner, has recorded a remarkable opinion. A well-to-do Brahmin died after a long illness. His widow had watched the deceased until late at night, and was found at five o'clock next morning unconscious. She became seriously ill, and died within eleven hours after her husband. A post-mortem was made, and Dr. Blaney, from the evidence discovered, pronounced it to be case of suttee by opium.

THE portrait of the Hon. Sir Dinshaw Petit, raised by public subscription, to be placed in the Technical Institute, Bombay, will be unveiled by the Governor on an early date.

THE Government of Bombay have sanctioned the construction of an hospital at Nassik, at a cost of Rs. 35,250. One-third of this sum, viz., Rs. 11,750, has been paid by the Nassik Municipality. The work is to be commenced as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT have called upon the Political Agent to furnish detailed reports in connection with the Rajkote Rajkumar College, and the Wadhwan Girasia School. The advisability of maintaining both the institutions has not been seen, particularly when sons of first-class Chiefs and Rajas for whom the institution is established are required to be placed under private tutors.

REFERRING to the attitude assumed by the Parsees towards the Congress movement, the Rast Goftar, a Bombay paper, maintained that the bulk of Parsee opinion is not in favour of their joining the Congress. Whether that opinion "is right or wrong," says the paper, "that is the fact, so far as we have been able to ascertain. The contention that Messrs. Dadabhai Nouroji, Mehta and Wacha, who have espoused the cause of the Congress, represent the Parsee community, is about as good as the quiet self-assumption of the three tailors of Tooley-street who, in their petition, spoke of themselves as 'we the people of England.'"

WITH the approval of the Government of India, his Excellency the Governor in Council has been pleased to sanction the formation of a Battery of Naval Volunteers at Kurrachee, to be designated "The Indian Naval Volunteers, Kurrachee Brigade." Captain G. C. Parker, I.M., has been appointed Commandant.

FEMALE MEDICAL AID IN INDIA.—The Lord Mayor presided at the Mansion House on Tuesday over a meeting on behalf of the United Kingdom branch of the National Association for Supplying Female Medical Aid to the Women of India, which is supported by "The Countess of Dufferin's Fund." Among those present were the Lady Mayoress, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Lord and Lady Dufferin, Lord Napier of Magdala, Sir William and Lady Muir, Sir Peter and Lady Lumsden, Sir George Bowen, Sir William Hunter, Sir Alfred and Lady Lyall, Sir Mountstuart and Lady Grant Duff, Lord H. Brudnell-Bruce, M.P., Mr. T. Sutherland, M.P., and Sir Owen Roberts. The Lord Mayor read a letter from Colonel Stanley Clarke on behalf of the Princess of Wales. Her Royal Highness greatly regretted her inability to be present, and stated that she continued to take the greatest interest in the work of the association, and wished every success to the meeting. Sir William Hunter, in describing the origin and aims of the association, stated that in 1884 Her Majesty commended the scheme for supplying female medical aid to the women of India to the Countess of Dufferin, who was then about to leave England to share the responsibilities and cares of her husband's high office as Viceroy of India. To the Marchioness of Dufferin belonged the honour of having given a practical organisation to the society. The objects of the association might be briefly stated as follows:—In the first place, to create a system of medical education for women in India; in the second place, at once and continually, to bring medical relief by means of female practitioners within the reach of the women of India so far as the funds of the society would permit; and, in the third place, to supply trained midwives and female nurses for women and children in hospitals and private houses. There were now 220 women in India receiving education in the medical schools of that country. In every presidency and province numerous dispensaries and several large hospitals had been founded for the relief of women and children. There were now 61 medical women practising in India, and of these 19 were in direct connection with the society. Sir Arthur Lyall afterwards described the progress of the association, especially in Northern India, and Sir M. Grant Duff spoke of the work of female medical education and relief in Southern India. The Lord Mayor then announced the receipt of several donations, including 500 guineas from the Drapers' Company, 50 guineas from the Princess of Wales, and 50 guineas from the Baroness Burdett-Coutts. His lordship added that th Mercers' Company had recently given the association 500 guineas, and that on two occasions the Clothworkers' Company had presented them with considerable sums. Mr. T. Sutherland, M.P., appealed to the public of this country to assist and support the work of the association in India. In proposing a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor, the Marquis of Dufferin observed that a plainer duty had never been submitted to the consideration of our fellow-countrymen than that suggested by the association.

THE annual dinner of the printing firm of Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. was held at the Albemarle Hotel, Brighton, on Saturday afternoon, July 6th. The weather was glorious, and the "Queen of Watering Places" never looked better or more attractive. The "comps." had gone down early, and after recruiting and recreating themselves sat down, to the number of about fifty, to an excellent repast, where there was "full liberty of feasting," and where evidently good digestion waited on appetite, and health on both. The chair was occupied by Mr. C. E. Johnston, the head of the firm, who was supported by his partners, Messrs. Heathcote, Randall, and Danby. Mr. Frederick Pincott filled the vice-chair, and amongst the guests were Messrs. Hanbury, Strong, Paterson, Simpson Jones, Colonel Spalding, Captain O'Callaghan, and Major Fenwick. After the good things on the table had been done ample justice to, the loyal toast of "The Queen and Royal Family" was given in a few appropriate words by the Chairman, the company singing the National Anthem. "Brevity" was the "soul" of the speeches which followed; but this did not detract from their merits. The toast of "The Firm" was given by Mr. Blomfield, who spoke of the mutual esteem and confidence which existed between the employers and the employed—a happy fact which helped to strengthen the latter in their work, often arduous and carried on under great pressure to meet the exigencies and eccentricities of authors and editors. He thanked the partners for the support and kindnesses which they had always shown, and hoped that the firm would continue long to enjoy their well-deserved prosperity and success. The toast was enthusiastically responded to with much cheering and "all the honours." Mr. Johnston, who said that this was the seventh occasion on which he had had to respond, replied in a few well-chosen words, and was followed briefly by Mr. Randall, whose popularity was evinced by the hearty reception he met with from all hands. Mr. Willis proposed the health of the Chairman, touching upon his invariable kindness and courtesy to all under him, and to his ever readiness to lend aid wherever wanted. The speaker disclaimed any attempt at flattery; he merely expressed the feelings of himself and his fellow workmen in paying an honest tribute to a noble character. (Tremendous applause and "For he's a Jolly Good Fellow.")—Mr. Johnston thanked them all for the manner in which they had received the toast, and for the kindly words which had accompanied it. His desire was to see them all not only contented, but as comfortable and happy as they could be, and in his wish and endeavour to make them so he was ably seconded by Mr. Randall. Mr. Ben Hogg gave the health of the vice-chairman, the ever genial and popular Mr. Frederick Pincott, who had always proved himself "a good friend to them all." The toast was most cordially received with cheers and musical honours. Mr. Pincott, in reply, stated that he had great pleasure year after year in being present at these annual meetings. He had always tried to make it his chief object to study the happiness of the workmen whilst studying the interests of the firm, and he was proud to find that the friendship between employers and employed had strengthened as the years had gone by. There was something different in this firm to others—it was not engaged in merely making money—it was doing work which had wide and historical value in issuing books, some of which would find their way all over the world and to future times—and one of these works, the "Persian Dictionary," he hoped would be completed before the Shah left England, so that his Majesty might carry away a copy with him. (Loud cheers.) Mr. H. Brooks proposed the toast of the visitors, which was tersely and humorously responded to by Captain O'Callaghan. The health of the stewards who had done so much to make the whole affair a success was given by Mr. Geleit, and responded to by the gentlemen in question—Messrs. H. Brooks and Ben Hogg. Between the toasts Messrs. Ben Hogg, Wheble, H. and G. Brooks, Baker, Willis, and Hurt sang some excellent songs, chiefly original. Mr. Albert Wilson produced a very clever "musical sketch" of his own, and, as an encore, gave some capital imitations of popular music hall vocalists, and Mr. Heathcote, "by special desire," delighted the company by giving them his "lost joke." A very enjoyable day was thus spent, and in the words of the Lexington Cackler, it was a "crushing success" of "mutual friends."

THE FALLING RUPEE AND A PROBABLE CONSEQUENCE.

UNDER the above heading Surgeon-General Sir William Moore, K.C.I.E., Q.H.P., in the current number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, has discovered a fresh sorrow for the already currency-depressed Anglo-Indian official. He recapitulates all the sorrows in connection with this matter which are already known and felt, and there is no ray of comfort to illumine the dark picture which he draws. In his opinion the "rupee disease" is of that inveterate character for which no remedy has yet been discovered. "In the meantime it progresses, and Cassandras prophesy a shilling rupee at an early date." This is bad enough, but it is not all. As Milton found a lower deep in the lowest depths, so Surgeon-General Moore had discovered that when matters have come to the worst with the impoverished English official in India a worse still remains to be encountered. And here is the "sorrow's crown of sorrow":—

In Dr. Moore's opinion marriage in India is the end of every Competition-Wallah's desire. "One of the inducements to young men to embark on an Indian career is the idea that they may afford to marry sooner than if remaining at home. It has been long said by mothers that an Indian civilian is worth £300 a year dead or alive. This ability to marry early will no longer be the case. The matter, therefore, affects the fair sex to a very considerable extent, and might really form a fitting subject for the shrieking sisterhood on the rights of women. Men in India are beginning to find they have not the same choice of wives from the "merry maids of England" once accorded to them, for the girls of the period are quick to perceive that Anglo-Indians have grown to be an impecunious race, and men in India are realising that they cannot support a European wife and family. The writer does not pay a compliment to the unselfishness of the merry English maidens, who, he thinks, look upon the Indian matrimonial market as declining in value; but if the passenger lists to India be taken as a guide, it does not appear to us that the stream of virgin beauty eastwards is at all diminishing. Far be it from us to say that the object of the voyagers is merely to find a partner for life; but the voyagers go, and many of them remain to lighten "the solitude of an Indian bungalow," where, Dr. Moore thinks, it is not good for man to live alone.

He will, however, have it that even if the merry English maidens go to India they are too expensive a luxury to be annexed. But marriage being the first law of nature—"for no one ever saw a bachelor cock-robin, or even a spinster tigress"—(is the Doctor quite sure about the latter?)—"Anglo-Indians will marry." But there's the rub. If they cannot afford to marry their own countrywomen where are they to find fitting mates?

Surgeon-General Moore supplies the answer, and in that answer will be found the fresh sorrow which accompanies the falling rupee.

"It is not to be supposed that the 'Zenana-Kana' will be again added to every Sahib's bungalow. But there is what many would esteem a danger threatening. This is marriage between Europeans and Indians. It must be recollected that many Native ladies have now been extremely well educated, so as to be fit to hold their own in any society. There are now well educated Hindu, Mahomedan, Parsee, and Eurasian ladies. It is supposed that some at least would not object to unite their fate with that of an European." The Surgeon-General seems to have a leaning towards feminine beauty that is of a dusky hue. "Although many Indian women we meet in the bazaars, on the roads, or see in the fields may be ugly as original sin and by no means so agreeable, this does not apply generally. If we consider in what female beauty consists, as in deepness or richness of colour, in gracefulness of outline and curve, in large and brilliant eyes, in luxuriant hair, in vivacity of expression, not even the Anglo-Saxon female will surpass the Indian female who is not exposed to the vicissitudes of the weather and climate." But a stronger argument is advanced:—"It is custom only which determines our preference for the colour of the European to that of the Ethiopian; Adam the progenitor was, as his name signifies, tawny. Extremes of white or of black must, therefore, be a departure from the original type if we accept the Bible history of creation.

Is Surgeon-General Moore in earnest, or is he, to use an expressive if inelegant phrase, merely "taking a rise" out of his readers? He would seem to have a particular penchant for the Eurasian female. "The Eurasian females have always been noted for beauty of form and features, and, as they are all Christians, it is probably with this class that intermarriage is likely to assume—at first at least—greater proportions than has yet been the case." The "chee-chee" speech the Doctor considers "a mere matter of education. Both Scotch and Irish maidens, American girls, and many English girls also, have a national or provincial accent." But he goes further. He holds that "with the facilities of education and bringing up accorded to Europeans, the Eurasian would compete favourably with the European mentally and surpass him physically." Besides, "the blending of races is essential to progress." It may be so under certain conditions, but not under the conditions which exist in India, and under which Europeans and Natives find themselves. We would commend to the worthy Doctor the following, taken from an article in the Calcutta Review, written by one who knew and had studied the subject carefully :—

"The experience of later ages has demonstrated that there exists a singular and mysterious antipathy between the black man and the white. The European element cannot coalesce and commingle with the Native stock in the ties of kindred and legitimate concubinage; it is forbidden for white to wed with black. Nor is this a mere antipathy of sentiment; or a simple antagonism of aims and interests and customs. These might be softened and overcome. The phenomenon in question lies far deeper; at a depth, indeed, seemingly beyond our reach. A mutual incompatibility of co-existence—an elemental and constitutional antagonism, which seems to forbid that the two races should co-exist, commix and flourish together under the same social laws and physical conditions. It would appear as if some great natural law forbade the fusion and union of the two. Where the two races are thrown together in the same arena the one it would appear must override the other; social equality and social fusion there can be none."

These sentiments may be open to argument in these Congress-progressive days, but we do not think that the time has come when marriage between English officials in India and Native or Eurasian ladies is possible or probable. If the Competition-Wallah of to-day must fall to this destiny he had better take to the study of Omar Khayiam, for sooner or later he will exclaim with the tent-making poet :—

"The shears of Fate have cut the tent ropes of my life,
And the broker of Hope has sold me for nothing."

BENGAL STAFF CORPS.

To be Lieutenants.—Lieut. Colin Finch, from the Royal Sussex Regiment ; Lieut. Robert Cobb Lye, from the Hampshire Regiment ; Lieut. Charles Francis Dobbie, from the Yorkshire Light Infantry ; Lieut. Charles Augustus Edwards, from the Royal Welsh Fusiliers ; Lieut. Alexander Henry Eustace, from the East Surrey Regiment ; Lieut. Charles Edward de Manley Norie, from the Yorkshire Light Infantry ; Lieut. Charles Oliver Swanston, from the Royal Irish Fusiliers ; Lieut. George Harrington Bush, from the Wiltshire Regiment ; Lieut. Philip Trevor Augustine Spence, from the Derbyshire Regiment ; Lieut. Charley Blair Baldock, from the Devonshire Regiment ; Lieut. Henry Walter George Cole, from the Northumberland Fusiliers ; Lieut. Percy Garratt Shewell, from the Hampshire Regiment ; Lieut. Herbert Charles Vesey, from the Lincolnshire Regiment ; Lieut. Douglas Herbert, from the Lincolnshire Regiment ; Lieut. Lionel Nelson Leeds, from the Border Regiment ; Lieut. Arthur Tremearne Walling, from the Lincolnshire Regiment ; Lieut. Bertram Strachey, from the West Riding Regiment ; Lieut. Charles Cameron Leveson-Gower, from the Royal Warwickshire Regiment ; Lieut. Henry Joseph Thacker, from the Royal Warwickshire Regiment ; Lieut. Bertrand Evelyn Mellish Gurdon, from the Manchester Regiment ; Second Lieut. Herbert Des Vœux, from the West Yorkshire Regiment.

MADRAS STAFF CORPS.

To be Lieutenants.—Lieut. Arthur Lockhart Gallie, from the Gordon Highlanders ; Lieut. Robert Charles Cockerill, from the South Wales Borderers ; Lieut. Hilton Vickers, from the Northampton Regiment ; Lieut. Charles Douglas Sandford, from the York and Lancaster Regiment ; Lieut. Walter George Hodgson, from the Worcestershire Regiment.

BOMBAY STAFF CORPS.

To be Lieutenants.—Lieut. Donald Baker, from the Royal Marine Light Infantry ; Lieut. John Charrier Keown, from the Royal Marine Light Infantry ; Lieut. William Caven Lockhart-Mure, from the Durham Light Infantry ; Second Lieut. John Gibbings Westropp, from the East Yorkshire Regiment.

THE statement that Captain Streatfield, A.D.C., will become Lord Lansdowne's Military Secretary when Lord William Beresford leaves the Viceregal Staff next year has been published, in ignorance of the fact that under the new rules the post can only be held by a Lieutenant-Colonel. It was a likely enough appointment otherwise, and no doubt Lord Lansdowne if he chose to press it as a special case would get his way.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JULY 9.

RAILWAY ALONG THE EAST COAST OF INDIA.

Sir R. PAGET asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether early sanction would be given to the construction of a railway along the east coast of India to connect the northern Circars with Madras; whether several municipalities and many of the Rajahs and other local representatives of the millions who inhabit the Circars and Orissa had publicly brought the pressing need that existed for the railway to the notice of the Madras and Bengal Governments; whether the engineers lately despatched by the Government of India to reconnoitre the country had reported favourably on the scheme, so far as it related to the country between Bezwada and Cuttack, and whether Lord Connemara had strongly urged the importance of the work; whether the Famine Commissioners of 1880 suggested that a railway might be made between Calcutta, Cuttack, the deltas of the Godavery and the Kistna Rivers and Madras to obviate the recurrence of the distress of the years 1824, 1833, 1865-6, and 1876-8; whether, since distress was again showing itself in Ganjam, this work would be placed first among the railway projects of the Peninsula; and whether he could lay any information upon the table regarding the financial prospects of the line.

Sir J. GORST: The Government have decided to survey the line from Bezwada to Cuttack, beginning on the 1st of December next. The answer to paragraphs two, three, and four, is yes. The answer to paragraph five is that the matter is at present receiving the careful and earnest attention of the Government. Some papers bearing on the subject could be laid before Parliament if moved for, but, until the probable cost of the line has been more nearly ascertained, no reliable forecast of the financial prospects of the undertaking can be made.

Sir R. PAGET asked when papers would be laid on the table.

Sir J. GORST said he could not give any information that would enable the House to judge of the financial prospects of the line until the survey was completed.

July 11.

INDIAN EXCISE.

In answer to Sir G. CAMPBELL,

Sir J. GORST said: Complete effect has not yet been given to the proposed reforms in the Bengal excise system, but the outstill system is being gradually abolished in one populous district after another. The system is not yet fully re-established. Allowance for a loss of revenue from the change of system has been made to the province of Bengal; but the Secretary of State cannot without reference to India state its amount.

CORRUPT INDIAN MAGISTRATES.

Dr. CAMERON asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was true, as stated in the Times Calcutta telegram of the 7th inst., that the Bombay Gazette of June 27 contained a notification authorising the clerks of eight magistrates to exercise each the power of the magistrate under the Mamlutdars Court Act of 1876; if so, whether the magistrates referred to were among those who swore that they had corruptly purchased their positions; what steps had been taken to secure the requisite legal knowledge on the part of the clerks thus called on to perform the duties of the magistrates; and what extra pay they received in consideration of the new duties imposed upon them.

Sir J. GORST: There has not yet been time for the Bombay Gazette of June 27 to arrive in this country. But the Bombay Government directed some time ago that in the Talukas in which the Mamlutdars were deprived of all judicial functions the head Karkans should be invested with the powers of a Mamlutdar, in order to exercise that jurisdiction of which the Mamlutdar was deprived. A head Karkan is not a clerk to a magistrate or Mamlutdar, but holds a distinct and independent office, and it is a constant practice to invest them with magisterial powers. Their qualification for exercising such powers has no doubt been ascertained in the usual way, and the Secretary of State has no reason to think that they receive extra pay. The practice of investing head Karkans with magisterial powers is perfectly legal. Sathé is no longer Assistant Commissioner. He was transferred last autumn to the post of Deputy Collector at Ratnagiri.

THE LEPROSY SCARE.

At the Balloon Society's meeting on Friday evening, July 5th, at St. James's Hall, Sir William Moore, Surgeon-General, delivered a lecture on "Leprosy;" Edward Kimber, Esq., in the chair. The Lecturer commenced by referring to the various causes which have recently brought the subject of leprosy prominently before the public. First, with regard to the statement made by the Rev. Mr. Wright that at last it had been proved by an experiment on a criminal that leprosy was contagious, Sir William Moore stated the fact had long been known. Secondly, referring to the old soldier in Ireland, who could not be conveyed to India because no vessel would take a leper, the lecturer remarked that this was probably a good thing for the leper, as he would certainly grow worse in a tropical climate. Thirdly, with regard to the establishment of a leper ward in London, the lecturer gave his opinion that no danger would result; but as lepers are not fond of confinement, he doubted if many lepers would willingly present themselves. In any remarks on the subject he (Sir William Moore) did not desire to come forward as enunciating opinions ex cathedra, but having spent thirty years in countries where lepers abounded, and having given great attention to the subject, he ventured to express his views. Having paid a tribute to the memory of Father Damien, and the graceful action of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in instituting a Damien Memorial, the lecturer observed that few people knew what leprosy really was, as it has been confused with various other diseases. He therefore gave a short description of leprosy, mentioning how the leper was formerly disposed of in India by surmajh, or burial alive. Sir William Moore next referred to the facts proving leprosy to be hereditary, as well as contagious. The view of contagion being the principal cause, appears to have prevailed from early ages, all the arrangements for leprosy in the Middle Ages being based on this assumption. Although there is reason to assert that leprosy did prevail in the country several hundred years back, there is equal reason to assert that it did not prevail in the extensive manner which has been supposed. The lecturer quoted the remarks of the Rev. Dr. Jessop, the antiquarian, in his "Village Life in England Six Hundred Years Ago." Dr. Jessop shows the utter want of sanitation and hygiene, and the various causes of such diseases as leprosy, black-death, scrofula, ague, dysentery, and scurvy, and he says: "At the outskirts of every town in England there were crawling about emaciated creatures covered with loathsome sores. They were called by the common name of lepers" Sir William Moore then proceeded to observe that although we are painfully interested in the lepers of other countries, and especially so in the lepers of India, still "charity begins at home," and we are perhaps still more vitally interested in the question of leprosy again becoming common in this country. The lecturer did not perceive any occasion for uneasiness. There have always been some lepers in London, and there will probably be more as communication with the East increases; but our sanitary arrangements, although not attaining the excellency required by Dr. Richardson, are opposed to the spread of any disease which requires communication of the active germ by contact. People in England would not associate with lepers on terms of close intimacy, and as regards heredity, people are not likely to marry lepers in this country, although in the East they are not so particular. Referring to the cry which has been raised that the Government of India should take immediate action with the view of lessening leprosy in that country, and so diminishing the chance of importation here, the lecturer said it was a mistake to suppose nothing had been done in India. And from his own personal knowledge he gave a brief account of the existing leper asylums in the Bombay Presidency. He also showed the difficulties opposing any general isolation of lepers in the Indian Empire, quoting from Native papers showing that sweeping measures would not enlist the sympathies of the people. Sir William Moore places more confidence in the gradual spread of civilisation and sanitation. He gave an account of the manner of life in India, which is not far different from what it was in England centuries back; and he ended by showing that under the term "sanitation" he included taking care of mendicant lepers, the cleansing generally of villages, drainage, ventilation, good water supply, the cheapening of salt, the prevention of scarcity of food, and measures for the check of specific disease.

The following resolution was carried:—"That the present scare on the subject of leprosy is unsupported by any extraordinary manifestation of the disease."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LIEUTENANT C. F. PINNEY, 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade, has been appointed an Aide-de-Camp to Lord Reay.

CAPTAIN STEWART, 1st Punjab Cavalry, has been appointed to officiate as Political Assistant, third class, and is posted as an Attaché in the Foreign Department.

THE services of Colonel Grant, Hyderabad Assigned Districts, have been replaced at the disposal of the Military Department.

A ROYAL ENGINEER dinner was held at Simla on June 22, when thirty-two officers were the guests of General Chesney. A message was wired conveying health and good wishes to his Royal Highness the Colonel, and brother officers of the corps, who were holding their annual dinner the same night in London.

AN additional Veterinary Hospital for the accommodation of British cavalry, at an outlay of Rs. 9,750, has been sanctioned for Rawalpindi.

THE construction of stables for 132 horses of British cavalry, at a cost of Rs. 26,000, at Rawalpindi, and for 129 horses at Rs. 29,394 at Sialkote has been sanctioned.

THE twenty-second annual meeting of the Southern India Rifle Association will commence at Bangalore on Sept. 11th, and lasts probably a fortnight.

PERSIA seems likely to furnish mules as well as horses for the Indian army. Captain Tate, of the 15th Bengal Cavalry, who recently visited Shiraz and Ispahan, managed to purchase over 300 mules, and that without striking off the main road into the heart of the country. These animals cost under Rs. 220 each landed at Karachi, and they are reported to be quite equal to hard transport work. It is probable that purchasing operations on a large scale will be carried out in Southern Persia, and mule-breeding may thus be stimulated in that country.

THE new pattern transport carts for the Indian army are now being made, and will be supplied first of all to troops on the North-West frontier. The cart will carry eight maunds, and will be drawn by a pair of mules with tonga harness plus strong rope traces. The wheels will be of wood, and of the pattern used in the bullock trains which work between Umballa and Simla, but smaller in diameter. The use of these carts will, it is calculated, enable a reduction to be made of 2,000 mules in the transport train of each army corps when on service.

IT is a curious circumstance, considering the numerous campaigns in which Indian troops have taken part of late years, that among the Native Officers of the Bengal Cavalry only fourteen remain who have won the Order of Merit—the V. C. of the Native Army. Out of the nineteen regiments there are eleven in which no Native officer is decorated with the coveted Order: while of the fourteen officers already mentioned the 19th Bengal Lancers claim five. The five cavalry regiments of the Punjab Frontier Force, including the Corps of Guides, make a much better show: nine Native Officers wearing the decoration. In the Central India Horse the number is four.

THE Ootacamund paper gives full details of the fatal accident to Captain Russell, R.A., on the 14th June:—"The competition was over three jumps—all very ordinary ones—a hurdle, stone wall, and a water jump. Before the sports began Captain Russell in a frolic cleared all these jumps on Midnight with the greatest ease, and he repeated the performance during the first round of the competition. In running off the tie, however, Midnight rushed the first hurdle, striking the top, and, apparently flurried by the contretemps, charged the stone wall unconnectedly. Captain Russell tried to steady him, but the brute took off too far, and, striking the obstacle with his knee, hurled Captain Russell over his head. For a moment the gay assemblage looked on unconcernedly, expecting Captain Russell to rise up and remount, and Midnight stood quietly by his fallen master. Then, as the prostrate man lay without motion, the gravity of the situation began to dawn on the spectators, and anxious inquiries took the place of light badinage. Five doctors speedily surrounded the fallen horseman, and as he still lay in that terrible motionless manner, a breathless hush fell over the assemblage; but still no one would admit the awful truth that he was dead. Full of life and vigour—but two minutes before gaily jesting as he rode to his death—it was hard to believe that he had been launched into eternity in this awful manner."

THE Bar Association in Lahore, writes the local paper, are making strenuous efforts to put down the practice of dalali. This is a step in the right direction for dalali is one of the more marked forms of the disease which is eating out the life of British administration in India. From the red-coated chaprassi upwards the system of palm oil and parasitism extends in every department of the public service. Where it graduates into bribery and peculation, and how far it invades higher European grades our law courts and "Crawford" or "Larpent" Commissions occasionaly let us see. While on this unpleasant subject we may state that it is just possible that another case a la Crawford or Larpent may shortly be made public. No decision has, however, yet been arrived at.

A FAST STEAMER.—The British India steamer Golconda (6,059 tons), which was not expected to arrive at Madras until to-morrow morning arrived in the Madras roads before midnight on Wednesday, and entered the harbour yesterday morning. Including stoppages at Malta, Port Said, Aden, and Colombo—at each of the two latter places for more than a day—she did the passage from London to Madras in twenty-six days—a feat which has never before been accomplished by any steamer. The Golconda is a four-masted vessel, and was built in Glasgow in October last. This is her third voyage from London, and she has proved herself to be a very quick and seaworthy vessel. She is built throughout with the finest steel, and is the largest vessel in the British India Company's fleet. She is commanded by Captain Loutit, one of the oldest servants of the company, with Mr. H. Wilson, as chief officer. Her fittings are magnificent, over £35,000 having been spent on them since the company purchased her. She is 440 feet long, and her beam 49 feet. The saloon deck, which is amidships, is 180 feet long. The saloon and music rooms are fitted with the finest Sicilian and Italian marble, and altogether the vessel is a magnificent and luxurious one. The cabins, both first and second class, are very spacious and well ventilated, and possess all the conveniences that human ingenuity can contrive; and she is fitted throughout with the electric light. She has brought a full cargo of cement, copper, &c., which is landed by means of hydraulic derricks, the steel wires fixed to which are tested to thirty tons weight. In taking in or landing cargoes there is no such noise as one is accustomed to hear on other steamers, as the hydraulic derricks when being worked are noiseless. The vessel carries several life boats, which are provisioned and watered for thirty days. A passenger by this vessel writes:—"We got a blow when off Socotra, and were soon in the midst of the south-west monsoon, but the Golconda behaved splendidly, and did not roll half as much as one expected she would do. Eight degrees is all that she did roll, and I have been in vessels which have rolled 48 degrees. The vessel sails for Calcutta to-morrow, and will be back to Madras on her outward voyage about fifteen days hence.—Madras Mail, June 21.

THE Kashmir Durbar, it is stated, are making arrangements for transporting the Dalgleish memorial from Barsala to Ladakh. This act of generosity on the part of the Durbar, observes a contemporary, removes the last doubt that remained as to whether the collected subscriptions would suffice for all purposes, and will considerably simplify Mr. Dauvergne's work.

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes :—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole prorietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA,

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. — Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic subetances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. — Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1889.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 2nd July; from Allahabad and Madras to the 30th June; and from Calcutta to the 30th June.

H.E. THE VICEROY has refused to re-consider the orders passed with regard to Kashmir and has answered the Maharaja's appeal to this effect.

LADY LANSDOWNE presided at a meeting of the Central Committee of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund held June 26 at the Viceregal Lodge. Sir J. B. Lyall took his seat as a member of the committee for the first time.

H.E. THE VICEROY will give a gold medal in connection with the Simla Fine Arts Exhibition.

AT the meeting of the Supreme Council on June 27 the Hon. Mr. Crosthwaite introduced a Bill to amend the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881.

THE despatch from the Secretary of State regarding the reorganisation of the military forces of Native States has reached Simla. A general approval of the action of the Government of India is expressed, no material alterations in the plan of working being suggested.

A DESPATCH on the Indian army system in connection with the proposals made for the abolition of the Presidency commands has also been received, and is now under the consideration of Government.

THE Commander-in-Chief will make an earlier tour, probably over the North-West Frontier, before starting on his landward expedition into Burma. He will leave Calcutta for Burma about the middle of December.

A Government Gazette extraordinary, issued June 28, notifies the intention of the Governor-General in Council to borrow a new four per cent. loan—two hundred lakhs of rupees—for which promissory notes will be issued in the form of the four per cent. of 1854-55, of which loan the notes to be now issued will form a part. Tenders are to be received by the Comptroller-General to July 30.

THE Secretary of State's despatch on the Excise question is now being circulated to the local Governments, which will duly report the results of their abkari administration.

THE Government of India will make no reply to the last representation of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce on the subject of Treasury balances and Presidency bank reserves.

THE total amount collected up to date for Lady Roberts' Fund for nurses' homes on the hills and officers' hospitals is nearly Rs. 79,000.

A REMISSION of three months' imprisonment has been granted to Colonel Bulkley. The case was reconsidered on the representation of the Duke of Connaught.

MESSRS. CURWEN, KANE AND CO. have succeeded the late General Nassau Leeds as proprietors of the Times of India. For the last ten years Mr. Curwen as Editor and Mr. Kane as General Manager have had the joint control of the paper.

IT is proposed to establish a military side of the Aitchison College at Lahore for training young men of good family for the army.

THE number of European troops located in the hills in the Bengal Presidency is 16,213, of whom 609 are women and 1,307 children.

ONE THOUSAND Sniders and three hundred carbines are to be immediately issued to the Ulwar troops reorganised for the frontier defence. Next cold weather the Jodhpore cavalry will be reorganised, and the Jeypore Transport Corps formed.

THE present distribution of Garrison Artillery will continue until accommodation has been provided for an extra battery at Quetta, Aden, and Rangoon respectively.

THE explosion at the Gunpowder Factory at Bhopal a short time ago resulted in the death of twelve men on the spot, and twelve have since died in the hospital, while fifteen are under treatment.

THE Bengal Government has sanctioned a loan of 10,000 rupees for relief works in Orissa.

MAJOR MELLISS is to visit Mysore in connection with a scheme for utilising the Native armies for frontier defence.

GENERAL ELLIS, the Adjutant-General, takes three months' leave to England from August next.

COLONEL CONWAY-GORDON has reached Simla, and resumed charge of the office of Director-General of Railways.

COLONEL E. HARVEY has been nominated by the Punjab Government to the third Superintending Engineership just created in the Province, but continues for the present on special duty at Simla. Mr. Oliver, who is officiating for him as Superintendent of Works, will get the acting rank of Superintending Engineer.

COLONEL FORD, Commanding the Royal Artillery at Rawal Pindi, has been placed on special duty in the Military Department.

MR. PETERSON has resigned the Bengal Civil Service from 26th April.

MR. E. SIMPSON BYRNE, who previously officiated as Accountant-General, Punjab, acts for Mr. Logan, the present Accountant-General, when the latter takes leave shortly.

THE Jynthee Bridge, on the E.I.R., near Madhapur, collapsed on June 25, owing to heavy rains, shortly after the mail train for Calcutta to Bombay had passed over it.

HEAVY rain fell during the early part of last week in Bombay, causing a collapse of four houses, consequent upon one of which two persons were killed and fourteen injured.

MR. BUYERS, Engineer-in-Chief of the Upper Burma Railway system, is now in Simla in connection with a projected railway from Segain to Mogoung.

MR. GRIESBACH will shortly return to India from Kabul to buy mining machinery on the Amir's behalf, as the mineralogical prospects of Northern Afghanistan are said to be promising.

THERE has been a steady drop in the Bank rate throughout the country during the last few weeks, and on Saturday it had reached 5 per cent. in Calcutta, having been at 8 per cent. three weeks previously.

THE Elgin Woollen Mills Company is about to go into liquidation.

MR. T. WOOD, Chief Storekeeper of the Sind-Pishin Railway, was discovered dead in a railway carriage on its arrival at Kurrachee on June 29, heat apoplexy being the cause of death.

NOTES.

THE news by Overland Mail is meagre enough. All that is of any importance or interest has been already given in Reuter's and the Times telegrams.

THE Pioneer says that although it is too early in the season for the Viceroy's autumn tour to be definitely marked out it has reason for anticipating that Lord Lansdowne will turn his steps in the first instance towards the North-West Frontier. His Excellency, it is hinted, will visit the Punjab and Beluchistan along the whole length of their borders. "From Lundi Kotal, on the north, and from the Khojak, on the south, a glimpse can be got of what will some day become the debatable land between England and Russia in Asia. In a short tour the full value of the defensive strength of the frontier cannot properly be appreciated, but Lord Lansdowne will be able to realise somewhat by a personal visit to the Khyber and the Khojak what our military experts and engineers have accomplished during the past five or six years."

THE same journal says that now that Sir George White is at Simla the opportunity should be taken of utilising more fully the fighting races which have gradually come under British control in Beluchistan and the country to the north of the Sibi-Peshin line of communications. "The Madrassi and Hindustani soldier has notoriously deteriorated" (Will Madras and Bengal allow this?), "the grand Sikh race is said to be losing its distinctive martial character" (is this true?), "and twenty years hence we may have to look further afield than the Punjab for the bulk of our real fighting men. It behoves us, therefore," continues our contemporary, "to utilise the good material which is now ready to our hand, and the first step in this direction might well be taken beyond the Suleiman, where new tribes have accepted British rule, as the necessary result of the permanent occupation of Quetta and the Peshin plateau."

SERVICE in India is now a pleasanter occupation for Tommy Atkins than it was twenty years ago, when he had to swelter for years in the plains without a chance of ever catching a cooling breeze from the eternal hills. To-day the number of European troops located in the hills in the Bengal Presidency is 16,213, of whom 609 are women and 1,305 children. The entire number of troops in the Presidency is 43,305—or a good deal more than half the entire British army in India; so that the number of men in the healthy atmosphere of the hills is nearly 33 per cent. Over 7,000 of the men are in temporary locations at Dalhousie, Ranikhet, Chakrata, the Gullies, Solon, and similar settlements. Dagshai, Sabathu, and Jutogh, we notice, rank with Indian hill stations proper.

AN Allahabad paper states that tribal bands beyond Takhtapool have assembled in considerable force, and are assuming an hostile attitude owing to the reported contemplated extension of the railway to Kandahar. British troops, consisting of 500 men of all arms, are massed at Chaman; but the force is altogether inadequate, rendering Chaman, in the event of a sudden emergency, of no strategical value whatever.

A Bombay Government Gazette contains an authority from the Governor in Council to eight head clerks of mamlutdars in the districts of Ahmednugger, Khandeish, Sattara, and Sholapore, "to exercise each the powers of a mamlutdar, under the Mamlutdars' Courts Act 3 of 1876. It would be interesting to know, says a local paper, what a peccant mamlutdar does for his pay, after his magisterial powers have been taken away and his clerk has been appointed to sit for him as civil judge.

IT is evident, in the Bombay Presidency, at all events, that the vernacular Press has not all the scurrility of journalism to itself. The religious English organ called the Bombay Guardian, commenting on the Government's vindication of Mr. Quinn, the magistrate of Patna, from the grossly libellous charges brought against him by Mr. Dyer and his fellow fanatics, says that the Government despatch to the Secretary of State is "fraudulent," and it attacks the Government of India with more than forty-parson power of vehement abuse. It accuses it of "raising revenue at the price of blood," of being "a set of place-seekers who care nothing for the welfare of the people," of "mocking at the idea of just rule," of "being in India merely to earn pensions to spend in England," and of "being an apology for a Government with which India is cursed." This is a fine specimen of Christian charity, and an excellent one for the vernacular Press to follow.

THE teetotal fanatics at home who have declared in Parliament and on platforms that the Government is doing its best to make all India drunk will rejoice excise agitators to learn that the high duty on distillery liquor and the want of protection from the operations of illicit distillers are said to have killed Mr. Halliday's distillery at Rangoon. The buildings and grounds were sold the other day, and realised Rs. 85,000. The premises are likely to be utilised as an ice factory.

IT is desirable, says the Statesman, to tell the Supreme Government plainly that if any suggestion has been made to revive the Press Commissionership through Reuter's agency in any way that will give that agency the least discretion as to the nature of the intelligence to be transmitted thereby, the proposal will be received with strong disapproval throughout India. The Agency is already much distrusted on account of the bias which commonly marks its telegrams, hardly a week passing in which the company is not reflected upon in the public Press for the unsatisfactory character of its news. So general has become this feeling that, as many of our readers are aware, the Central News Agency will open a new Indian service at the end of the present month, to which two out of the three English daily papers in this city have agreed to become subscribers, and to which the third (Englishman) will be forced to subscribe in self-defence. The Bombay Gazette will be a subscriber to the new service. The fact is that "competition" has become necessary. We have no ill-will to Reuter whatever, and although we think the Company has not behaved handsomely towards ourselves we have no wish to injure it; but in any arrangements the Government may be contemplating it must give no discretion to the Agency as to the nature of the messages it may be required to submit. The Pioneer, the Morning Post, and other journals in India and Burma have also subscribed to the service.

WE thought that Simla was the only place where "booing" was thoroughly practised, but "Sentinel" writes in the Madras Hindu:—"The platform of the Central Station is an amusing and an instructive theatre when the Governor 'invites' society to witness his arrival at, or departure from, Madras. Everyone who wants an appointment is there in the hope the Governor will note and remember his appearance. Everyone who wants promotion is present, animated by a similar care of self. A large number are present on the principle that the next best thing to being the rose is to be seen near it. Those who possess the privilege of shaking hands with the Governor attend in order that they may excite the admiration and the envy of those who do not possess that privilege. A few subalterns like the chance of airing their new uniform. A few wives seize the opportunity of doing their husbands a good turn, and of airing their latest dress-improvers. The church is there to gather glory from an earthly king; the police to keep order; the civilians because they are the salt of the earth; the C.I.E.'s because they want C.S.I.'s, and the C.S.I.'s because they want another letter of the alphabet. And when it is all over every one comes back to the club and swears the whole thing is a d——d nuisance. But this is Loyalty, and consolidates the everlasting supremacy of the British Empire. Amen!"

THE GOVERNOR IN GANJAM.

The following is the reply made by his Excellency Lord Connemara to an address presented to him on the 15th ultimo by representatives of the inhabitants of Sompett:—

"I am very glad to have the pleasure of meeting you, gentlemen, this morning, and am very much obliged to you for your hearty welcome, and for the beautiful pandal you have taken the trouble of putting up. It is always gratifying to the representative of the Queen to find that he is welcomed among the people with whom he comes in contact. I may mention that only yesterday I received a message from the Queen-Empress to say that she was extremely anxious about her people here, and that she enjoined upon all her officers to do their best to alleviate the distress here. Although it is a very long way between here and Scotland, at the same time you may be quite sure no person feels more for the distress that exists now in Ganjam than Her Majesty the Queen-Empress of India. I suppose there are few Sovereigns in the world who can be said to take such an active interest in the distant parts of their realms as she does; but we who have the honour of serving Her Majesty here know very well that there is no portion of her subjects in which she takes greater interest than in the natives of India. I can assure you that I myself have felt very great pain to find in going through this District that there is so much distress and so much real suffering. I have been now through almost all the parts that are suffering most, and already have been able to suggest such measures as will have the effect of relieving a great deal of the distress. One of the things that we have done in the last few days is to order up some seed grain from the Godavery District. It will be distributed in certain centres, and the ryots will be able to get seed grain in that way and to sow their crops. We must hope that the Almighty will send us a good monsoon, and if that is the case, I have no doubt that the distress which is now very prevalent all over the District will soon be mitigated; at the same time I do not think I can conceal from myself that it will be a long time before the District will re attain its former prosperity. There are many things about it which marked it to be a very fertile country in ordinary times. There is a larger amount of rice crop in this District than many other Districts I know of, proportionately to the kind of soil that exists, although I think it would be almost better if there were more dry crops than rice crops; but I have no doubt that contributes very much to the wealth of the District in prosperous times. I am very much obliged to you for meeting me this morning, and to the Parla Kimedi Zemindar for coming down from Parla Kimedi to see me. I find that in many parts of the District several Zemindars are exerting themselves to relieve their people; in other parts I am sorry to say that that good example has not been followed. I hope before long that all the Zemindars will do their best to relieve the wants of the people upon their estates. I also find in many parts of the District some wealthy ryots and private gentlemen are giving large employment to the people. That is a very praiseworthy thing, and the Government is extremely thankful to them for showing this amount of public spirit. In conclusion, I am very glad to see you, and hope that the next time I have the pleasure of visiting Ganjam it will be at a time when there is no distress, and I hope that time will not be far away."

GANJAM.

We have received from the India Office the following copy of a telegram from the Governor of Madras, dated July 16, 1889:—

"Condition of Ganjam for the week ending July 13:—Monsoon continues favourable, and harvest prospects greatly improved by recent rains. Average fall at 16 stations during week under report ·75 inch. Numbers on large famine relief works 8,146; on small works 6,435. Numbers on gratuitous relief 36,174; of these 22,237 are children, 5,061 men, and 8,876 women, but returns incomplete. 42 relief circles constituted, and 45 kitchens established.

"Imports of grain by sea 162 tons, by land 450 tons. Deaths from cholera 1,193. In deference to collector's urgent request 400 tons more seed grain ordered to be imported for distribution."

THE Times of India regrets to announce the sudden death of Mr. M. Avaskar, a B.A., and B.C.L., of Oxford University. While he was going to Baroda to take up an important appointment there, he heard that his friend Mr. Sampatrao Gackwar Sirkar's brother had gone to Surat. He therefore broke his journey at that place and put up in the travellers' bungalo, where he died on the 19th ult. He was the first person in the Beni-Israel community who went to England to obtain a liberal education.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE HOME CHARGES.

(Times of India.)

During the past ten years we have annually criticised the Blue-Book which contains the Home Accounts of the Government of India, and called attention to certain changes which appear in it, which are, to use the mildest phrase, scandalous. Criticism has produced a healthy effect, and some reform has been made, but much remains to be done. The Home charges have grown to an abnormal amount during the past quarter of a century. And there is but little doubt that they could be greatly curtailed. India will always have to remit a certain amount as the interest of the debt which she has contracted for works which have developed the resources of the country. But there is no reason why the amount should not be lowered if Indian loans were put in the market with more financial and economic skill. "It is an inevitable consequence of the subjection of India," to use the words of Sir John Strachey, "that a portion of the cost of her Government should be paid in England." But every nerve should be strained to make the cost as small as possible, for the simple reason that for this cost India receives no economic return. It is impossible to read the Blue-Book before us without failing to see the vast amount of good which could be effected by the pruning knife being vigorously applied to the India Office. If the House of Commons appoints a Special Committee to inquire into the administration of India, the first task of the Committee ought to be to make a searching inquiry into the cost and working of the India Office. At present, Sir John Strachey informs us, "the cost of the Secretary of State's administration, including all the establishments connected with the India Office and the Home Government of India, was about £200,000." No colony would pay £200,000 for their share of the cost of the Colonial Office. But when we consider the rate of the salaries, the total does not cause surprise. The permanent Under-Secretary of State gets £2,000. The present incumbent was a young Oxford man, with no experience of India when he was first appointed. He had been Private Secretary to Mr. Gladstone, which was, of course, more important than having a knowledge of India. This office would be gladly accepted by a retired Civilian of considerable Executive and Secretariat experience for a remuneration of £600 a year, besides his pension. There are six secretaries at £1,200 each. "Two receive £1,800 and £1,400, respectively, which salaries are personal to the present holders; one secretary also receives Indian military pay at 25s. a day and colonel's allowance at £668 12s. 5d. a year; one an Indian Judicial pension of £1,200 a year; one an Indian Civil Service annuity of £1,000; and one Indian Military pay at 20s. a day." A secretary at £1,200 a year, plus £1,000 pension, is handsomely paid. There are many efficient retired Civil Servants, who would accept the post for £500 per annum plus their pension. There are seven assistants on £800 a year, rising to £1,000 by an annual increment of £25. Now these assistants ought to be recruited from the ranks of the Uncovenanted and Covenanted Service—men who had taken a first small pension, and would be willing to accept the post for £300 a year. The same remark applies to the eleven senior clerkships from £600 to £800 a year, and the six junior clerkships from £200 to £600 per annum. The Military Department should be recruited from retired officers, and the railway and finance from those who have served in these respective departments. The change would lead to greater efficiency in the India Office and considerable saving of expense. The Government could say, "We will employ you if you sacrifice a portion of pension during the time you hold office;" or taking the pension into consideration, they could fix the salaries on a low scale. What the Anglo-Indian desires is to retire before he is entirely worn out, to have a competence in England, and, above all, to have work to do. In addition to the economy effected by the above reform, the cost of administration at Home might further be reduced by a great deal of the clerical work of the India Office being done in India. If there were fewer clerks, the number of despatches criticising every petty measure of the Government of India and the Local Government would considerably diminish. At present the postage of despatches to and from India amounts to £4,103, and telegrams only to India to £4,770. The cost of the Store Department under the heading General Administration is given at £27,051, but in the detailed account it amounts for 1889-90 to £38,678, and in 1888-89 it amounted to £40,288. A considerable saving might be effected in this branch of the administration, if the Local Governments were given greater latitude in getting their stores by contract in the local markets.

The India Office, the War Office, and the Admiralty are the three great leeches which prey on the finances of the Empire Indian Finance Ministers have frequently complained bitterly that the finances of India have been frequently sacrificed to the wishes of the Horse Guards, but the evil continues, and will continue, till some Viceroy arrives who has the courage to say that he will resign his office rather than the scandal should endure. The cost of the Indian troop service still amounts to £217,833. For many years we have annually called attention to this extravagant item, and all we have said has been fully endorsed by the Finance Committee. But we see no present prospect of reform. However, we must persevere in the good work of calling attention to the scandal, even though it leads to a monotonous repetition of the same facts and arguments. The Finance Committee after carefully going through figures find that the total cost of the service might be estimated at £16-7-9 per adult. The Director of Indian Marine is of opinion that the work could be done by a private line of first class steamers for £10, or certainly for £10 to £12 per head if a contract were made for a term of years. "If the information be correct," wrote the Finance Committee, as we have every reason to believe it is, "and if the present troopships could be sold at a fair value, a saving of from £4 to £6 per head could apparently be effected in the present direct and indirect charges." Taking the figures of 1884-85, when 21,608 passengers were conveyed at a cost of £16-7-9 per head, the saving that would result from having the work done at £12 a head would amount to £92,806 per annum, and if the troops could be conveyed for £10 a head, the saving would reach the larger figure of £136,022. In these days of a depreciated rupee £136,022 is certainly a large sum. The Home Government state that they cannot do an act of justice to a large body of public servants because it would cost £36,000 per annum. The Finance Committee, as they were in duty bound, added: "It is for the Government to decide whether the political advantages of keeping up the troopships do or do not outweigh the economy which may be expected to arise from the abandonment of the present committee." It will be interesting to know what the Indian Government or the Home Government has done towards the solution of the problem. It is foolish to appoint a Finance Committee at a considerable cost and to ignore their more important suggestions. Under the heading of Marine, we find in the Blue Book the usual entry: "Contribution towards the expenses of her Majesty's ships employed in the Indian seas," £70,735. It is gratifying to learn that in 1889 it is estimated to be £40,075. On this point the Finance Committee made some remarks which ought to be kept in mind. They wrote: "The Government of India pays £70,000 on account of the services of six Royal naval vessels in Indian waters. Three of them are exclusively for service in the Persian Gulf, and are entitled to repairs and coals free. While these vessels are for the most part powerful as to fighting qualities, they are hardly fit to steam or sail against the monsoon." Experts deny that the vessels which the Admiralty send to Indian waters are powerful as to fighting qualities. It is a matter for serious consideration whether India should not make the same bargain with the Admiralty that Australia has done.

There are some signs that the India Office and the Admiralty are becoming amenable to criticism, and it is to be hoped that the day is not distant when India will cease to be charged £10,000 for the mission to the Court of Persia, and to her being taxed £15,000 for a portion of the Consular charges in China. As we have often before stated, India has unfortunately nothing whatever to do with the mission to Persia though she is chiefly interested in the welfare and independence of that country. The Minister to Persia is not appointed as he ought to be, and as a Parlimentary Committee recommended he should be appointed by the Indian Government, not by the Foreign Office at Downing Street; and there is not the slightest doubt why India should contribute to England's Consular charges in China any more than should Australia. These are matters to which members of the House of Commons might with profit devote their attention. They do not require local and technical knowledge like the Abkari problem. The House of Commons might also do good service to India if it appointed a committee to make a thorough investigation into the Home charges. The money is spent by those who have not to find the means, and this all over the world leads to extravagance and laxity of supervision. The first step towards putting the finances of India into a truly healthy state must be a thorough investigation of the Home accounts. At present the only check in the India Office is the report of the Auditor, and it is gratifying to learn that in the Store Department an over-payment of 1s. 8d. "must be disallowed."

INDIA AT MANCHESTER.

(Pioneer.)

The Home critics of the Government of India have hitherto had the same advantage as the pulpit orator—to wit, that there is no one on the spot to reply to them. If Mr. Caine rises in Exeter Hall or Mr. Bradlaugh in the Freethinkers' Tavern to give their opinion on the administration of "England's greatest dependency"—India's greatest torments usually call her so—they know they can usually beat the drum denunciatory without any danger of retort from the belaboured administrators; whereas if anyone calls Lord Salisbury a nincompoop there is always someone at hand to call him a genius, which in a way balances matters. This is a fact which no one has used to better purpose than Mr. Holt Hallett. For years past he has preached to Lancashire that if only the Government of India were wise, Lancashire would have a much wider market and more extensive demand for its goods. This, of course, Lancashire was naturally inclined to believe; and, as the oracles of its opinion, the Manchester press, have swallowed Mr. Holt Hallett at a gulp, it had probably come to regard the matter as one beyond the reach of question. What must have been the general astonishment, therefore, when Mr. Westland appeared three weeks ago before the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and boldly took Mr Holt Hallett's arguments to pieces, throwing doubt on the existence of the markets hoped for in connection with the proposed Burma-Siam railway scheme, and pointing out that to complete it China would have to build railways she was not likely to do at present. For the rest, Mr. Westland made a very tolerable defence of the Government's railway policy, putting its case as against the pseudo-progressists of Lancashire in a nutshell by saying that "the interests of English commerce, apart from its reciprocal effect on India, were not an object on which the Government of India would be justified in spending its revenues." Perhaps there are few Indian officials on furlough who would care to employ their time in exposing the fallacies about India which pass current on English platforms; but there are occasions when the experiment might be tried with great effect. It is amusing, by the way, to find how men, whose sole experience of India was gained in a few months' touring last cold weather, are already beginning to pose as authorities on matters Indian. Sir Edward Watkin, for example, was on the platform when Mr. Westland delivered his speech, and apparently the only one present who was considered capable of adding a few remarks. Some newspapers, too, evidently regard it as a great feather in the cap of the Uncovenanted that Sir Edward should have declared the concession of their demands to be a matter of "mere justice." This may be true enough; but that it is so in Sir Edward's opinion scarcely gives a presumption one way or the other.

A HALF-STARVED EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

(Mandalay Herald.)

With the return of Brigadier-General Wolseley to Mandalay, and the break-up of the Poukan Expeditionary Force, we are reasonably led to infer that all misunderstandings or troubles in this direction are at an end. Many and conflicting have been the reports that have from time to time reached us, and although past experience has taught us to accept official despatches with a more than ordinary large pinch of salt, still it is impossible to ignore the fact that some good and wholesome work has been performed. It is true that the expedition under General Wolseley was not based upon a scale of any considerable magnitude, perhaps from the fact that the "objects and reasons" of the expedition rather resolved themselves into a spectacular walk round or military display than for more practical or sanguinary purposes. Certain refractory villagers had to be impressed with the mighty power of British arms, and in order to effect this it was necessary to bring within their immediate ken a sample of the material of which our troops are composed. This impression, we are officially informed, has been created, and the "objects and reasons" of the expedition have therefore been attained. Now, one would naturally have thought that, in connection with so small an expedition, the difficulties of transport or commissariat arrangements would have been reduced to a minimum; but, if the information we have received be reliable, these very important adjuncts to the movements of an expeditionary force either never existed or totally collapsed prior to the troops entering upon their long and tedious marches. This lamentable break down—a stronger term might perhaps be more properly used—was not due to any want of transport animals, for there were more than sufficient for all practical purposes, but from lack of supply of material. "Only sufficient rum for three days," is the lament of the Tommys that took part in this rather expensive walk round; a few hard biscuits and sugarless weak tea previous to and after many a wearisome trudge over steep and rugged hills; an almost utter absence of wholesome bread and beef, nothing in fact but tea and biscuit—biscuit and tea. The consequence was that dysentery prevailed on every side, and we are assured that many of the men of the 4th Rifle Brigade still suffer from the actual want of wholesome and nourishing food. The Native troops appear to have fared better, for they were supplied with rice and the condiments that serve to make the grain an enjoyable and appetising meal. They did not miss the daily dram that is considered by Mr. Atkins as forming an important part of his daily ration, nor did they pine for lack of bread and meat, which they never receive nor expect. Nevertheless, the whole force suffered privations that might, with the exercise of judicious forethought have been omitted in what appears to have been a badly arranged and still more badly carried out programme. And yet no reason really existed why an adequate commissariat supply should not have accompanied the force in its perambulation through the country. That it did not is testified to by those who suffered from its absence, and it now only remains to ascertain upon whom to cast the blame. A grave fault has been committed, and the matter should not be allowed to die a natural death, but be subject to an official and exhaustive inquiry.

LEGISLATIVE COWARDICE.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Exactly what we predicted has been the result of the repeal of the C. D. Act in India; and it is much to be regretted that Lord Dufferin's Council had not at the time sufficient backbone to protest against the monstrous folly. This was only perpetrated, because Lord Cross was frightened by a snatched resolution of the House of Commons, which was in turn frightened by the shrieking sisterhood who crowded the Ladies' Gallery during the debate on the subject. Now that portions of the British Army in India are being decimated in consequence by preventible disease, the members of the Viceroy's Council—with the exception of Mr. Elsmie who, although the Punjab was not affected, courageously spoke out—who did not raise their voices in protest against the contemplated injury, may have the consolation of feeling that they neglected their plain duty through sheer moral cowardice. Some, like Sir Charles Aitchison, may have been honestly incapable of straight political thought owing to the fervour of high religious principles. For such all men must have respect, however much we may be agreed that from their very goodness must come evil, when they undertake to administer a Government in any part of this weak and sinful world. We do not think, however, that all the Viceroy's Council would excuse their folly on the ground that their religious fervour was such that they really could not distinguish between political prudence and folly. No other excuse, however, is possible; and now that the mischief has been done, the Indian Government cannot, as it should be able to do, now adopt a strong attitude with Lord Cross. Had the Government of India pointed out the undoubted evil which would result from the repeal of the Act, and strongly remonstrated with the Secretary of State, the repeal could only have been temporary and tentative; the working of the experiment would have been watched; and Parliament would have been prepared to learn that it was a failure. Now, on the other hand, representations have to be made de novo by the Government of India, already stultified by the fact that a year ago it had not the foresight to see an imminent danger to the army, palpable to almost every one else who gave thought to the subject, or had not the courage to express its opinion. We said at the time that before two years were passed, the Government would be compelled to say what it did not dare to say then; but it is a poor consolation to find ourselves so completely justified at the cost of so much efficiency lost to the British army in India. Administrators who have not the courage to say that the British army in India shall not be given over as a plaything for philanthropic faddists at Home, are not suited to administer the affairs of this country.

THE ANOMALIES OF LEAVE.

(Bombay Gazette.)

One of the grievances of the European members of the higher Uncovenanted Service relates to leave. In the recently issued "Civil Service Regulations" the ordinary Civil Services of the State are divided into two parts, (1) the European Services and (2) the Indian Services, and the grievance of the European Officers to whom we refer consists in the fact that although they are Europeans drawn from the same class of society as the Europeans employed in the Covenanted Civil Service and subject to the same climatic influences in India, their leave is regulated by the "Indian Service Leave Rules," while other Europeans holding precisely similar offices, doing exactly similar work, and drawing similar pay are allowed to get their leave under the more favourable rules called the "European Service Leave Rules." We may here explain that the term "European Service" includes (1) "The Covenanted Civil Service," (2) officers of the army serving in Civil appointments when subject to the Civil Leave Rules, (3) officers not belonging to the Covenanted Civil Service or the army who hold certain scheduled offices, provided that they are appointed thereto by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, or with his particular sanction. The third class, who had hitherto been subject to the Indian Service rules, having, after considerable discussion of "grievances," been specially admitted to the more favourable rules in 1872. So far the distinction is clear enough, the line of demarcation between the European and Indian Services being "European recruitment." Officers holding the favoured appointments usually held by Europeans have the benefit of the "European Service Leave Rules" if they are sent out from home by the Secretary of State, or, being in India, are appointed with his particular sanction; while those who were born in India or came out here of their own accord, on the chance of getting employment, are subject to the "Indian Service Leave Rules" whether they hold one of the more favoured appointments or serve Government in a humbler capacity. If this position had been rigidly maintained, the rule would not have been an unfair one. No doubt the European who had procured employment in India would have still thought he had a grievance in that other Europeans doing the same work and drawing the same pay had better rules for leave; but Government would have had a fairly logical answer to give him to the effect that he was engaged in India and could not, because he was a European, be allowed rules different from those applicable to others engaged in India who were nor Europeans.

But it was not maintained. The present agitation is due in a great measure to unwise concessions and invidious distinctions introduced into the regulations thirteen or fourteen years ago. There was then, as now, considerable agitation regarding uncovenanted grievances; and, as the result of these, the Secretary of State made certain concessions to Indian engaged men under which the European Service Leave Rules were made applicable to the uncovenanted officers then holding positions which would have entitled them to the rules had they been engaged by the Secretary of State; a nominal list of these special admissions forms the subject of an appendix in the Civil Service regulations, and it is explained that the conditions precedent to the entry of the name of an officer in this appendix were as follows:—(1) that he was not of purely Asiatic descent; (2) that he held substantively on the 3rd January 1872 one of the scheduled offices; (3) that his salary on the 10th February 1876 was not less than six thousand rupees a year. The dates are dates of accident, and represent no general principle, but the date on which certain despatches reached India, and it is difficult to conceive a more illogical compromise than that involved in these arbitrarily fixed dates. For example, all the Rurki and other Indian College engineers who are not of purely Asiatic descent are admitted to the European Service Rules if they were assistant engineers of the third or higher grade on 3rd January 1872, provided that on the 10th February 1876 they did not receive less than Rs. 500 a month. The attaining of this salary before or after the date named was perhaps a pure accident due to circumstances never intended to have any material effect on the leave rules of the officer concerned. A and B are Rurki engineers of the same year. A is posted to one province, B to another. A, the senior man, is unfortunate and received promotion in his province to Rs. 500 a month in February 1872, and is therefore cut out from the "European Service Rules" for the whole of his service; B, the junior, is more fortunate and receives promotion in his province to Rs. 500 a month on 1st January 1872, and thus gets into the list of special admissions, and although all through his subsequent career A maintains his seniority, B gets the more favourable rules, and has an unfair advantage in the matter of leave not only over A, but over all his contemporaries of pure Asiatic descent. So that while the Secretary of State refused over and over again to make any distinction between Europeans and Natives engaged in India for similar work, he by these special concessions made the most invidious distinctions possible. The "European Service Leave Rules" are not, however, after all so very much more favourable than the "India Service Rules" if Government would remove from the latter a few of the restrictions they contain, which seem to the students of such matters very meaningless and unfair. The officer entitled to the European Service Leave Rules measures his furlough by one-fourth of his active service subject to a maximum of six years leave. Without medical certificate he cannot take furlough until he has put in eight years' active service, and must put in an interval of at least three years' active service between each furlough; but with the exception of these and one or two other restrictions which we need not refer to, he has always at his credit the balance of leave earned (i.e., one-fourth of his active service), less leave taken, but with the Indian service the restrictions are different, though the total amount of leave that may be taken is very liberal. An officer during the whole course of his service can only take two years' furlough, but he can also take three years' leave on medical certificate, making in all five years' leave, but instead of this being measured in connection with his active service and his always having at his credit the amount of leave earned, less that taken, his rules are circled round with all sorts of restrictions. Furlough for one year is due after eight years' service (whether active or not) and two years after eighteen years' service, but it cannot be taken by instalments. For example, an officer with ten years' service takes eight months' furlough out of the one year due, he cannot again take furlough for eight years, when he can take one year, after which he must again serve eight years before he can take the remaining four months due to him. He can of course in the interim get leave on medical certificate, but even this class of leave is hampered by restrictions. He cannot (very properly) take more than two years at a time and cannot have leave out of India on medical certificate more than twice. This latter restriction seems very absurd. An officer in Bombay, say, has twice run down to Colombo on medical certificate for a few months, and having still a couple of years' medical leave at his credit, is advised by a medical man to go home to England, to Australia, or to the Cape for a thorough change. But owing to this absurd rule he must retire, take leave without pay, or if he cannot afford either, remain in India at the risk perhaps of his life.

Government would be wise to reconsider its leave rules and assimilate them for all officers occupying the same position without any distinction whatever between Europeans and Natives. The European, no doubt, requires more leave than a Native and will take it, but it does not follow that it is at all necessary to give him more liberal leave rules. Taking long leave always involves a sacrifice of pay; and an officer, whether European or Native, may be trusted not to make this sacrifice needlessly. If any distinction is made it should not be between "European" and "Native," but between "leave out of India" and "leave in India." Leave out of India is a necessity to a European and an advantage to a Native who should be encouraged to take such leave. Leave in India for very long periods is not a necessity to a Native or an advantage to a European, who should by the rules be discouraged from taking such leave, and we think that by a more enlightened admission of this principle Government would at once remove the grievances of the Europeans and do away with the present class distinctions regarding leave which disfigure the regulations.

PRUNING THE INDIA COUNCIL.

Just eleven months since we were apprised by our London correspondent that the Secretary of State had determined to deal comprehensively with the Home charges, and that large reductions were contemplated, especially in the Stores Department, which unquestionably was the one of them all which most required a thorough overhauling. So far the Stores Department has escaped the necessary revision, and the more is the pity, but long threatening comes at last. Meanwhile something is being attempted in another direction. It was also stated by our correspondent on July 31 last that reductions were contemplated in the expenditure on the India Council. Within the twelvemonth the India Council Bill has been introduced into the House of Commons, the purpose of which is to reduce the number of members to ten by leaving the vacancies unfilled. Considering the slowness with which reforms of Indian Administration are effected, especially when they touch the vested interests of the India Office in London, the appearance of a Bill on the table of the House of Commons within a year to the resolve to reduce the number of the Council must be regarded as a very satisfactory and encouraging display of energy and promptitude. It was understood last year that the reasons which had the greatest weight with the Secretary of State were mainly, if not wholly, fiscal. It was said at the time that Lord Cross, in a moment of despondency, occasioned by a sudden fall in exchange, exclaimed, "The Council must go!" The Council, as every one knows, has hitherto consisted of fifteen members holding office for ten years, and re-eligible for a further period of five years, the emoluments being £1,200 per annum. The reduction of five seats, which will not be filled on vacancies occurring, will eventually produce an economy of £6,000 per mensem. The £12,000 which will still be payable to ten members could only be economised if the Secretary of State's despairing cry that the Council must go were to be heard, and answered, by the House of Commons. The saving to be effected will, in comparison with the vast sums lavished on the London departments, be scarcely a fleabite; and as it is to be realised in its entirety on the retirement or decease of members having some years lease of their seats and of their lives, it will not go any great way in mitigating the effects of disconcerting falls of exchange.

In truth, however, the fiscal aspect of the question of the reform of the India Council is that which has always been the most important in the eyes of those who have had occasion to observe the manner in which that cumbrous and ill-contrived organisation has acted as a drag upon all reform, and upon every other good work. It could not well have acted otherwise, if it acted at all. The number fifteen was fixed upon, as has been truly said, simply because there had been first twenty-four members of the Court of Directors, and then eighteen. But a saving feature of the old board was that six of the members were bound to be men who had spent ten years in administrative work in India, and that they should vacate their seats in rotation every three years. This insured a constant infusion of new blood. When the members are all appointed for ten years, with a possible five years in addition, the Council necessarily come to be composed of men whose career in India was closed years ago, and are no longer in touch with the India which they have to help to govern. As we have pointed out, the system has no more chance of working satisfactorily than would the Foreign Office with Lord Salisbury guided by a council of pensioned ambassadors, or the Colonial Office taking its policy from a cotery of retired Governors. There is no reason whatever why the Secretary of State should have a Council of Ten to assist him in his work of administrative revision. Neither of his colleagues finds the assistance of a Council necessary; the permanent officials are sufficient for every useful purpose. But if there must be, in deference to old traditions, a Council of Experts, it should be reduced from fifteen to six, and due provision should be made for a continual infusion of new blood. The period of office might well be fixed at three years, with eligibility for a further term of two years after passing six months in India to get abreast of the actualities in this country. A substantial saving of double the amount that will accrue from the cutting down of the number from fifteen to ten would be in itself better worth legislating for than a trifling economy of £6,000. But far beyond the question of pecuniary saving is the absolute necessity of curtailing in all new appointments the period of service on the Council, so as to insure the constant renewal of personalities and ideas in the India Office. Immense harm is done by the habit, which has become well nigh inveterate, of looking at everything from the standpoint of men whose work in India was done under conditions which have little in common with those that now obtain in this country.

ON SOME ERRORS OF FACT.

An up-country paper thought fit to give prominence to a very inaccurate and misleading reference to the Indian Court at the Paris Exhibition. In effect it is said that Sir George Birdwood advised against the India Office taking part in the Paris Exhibition in order that he might have an Indian section of his own; that he got for himself emolument and fame at the Paris and at other previous Exhibitions; that all Exhibitions of Indian products are being exploited in the interest of Sir George Birdwood and his friends. The facts are these: The British Government declined to have official connection with the Paris Exhibition on grounds which many may not accept as wise, but which are before the world, and by which the India Office is bound. Sir George Birdwood had nothing to do with the Cabinet decision or with the grounds therefore, but the Lord Mayor and others desiring to get up a private Indian section or sub-section, asked Sir George Birdwood to be chairman of the Committee. He and his coadjutors consented to help, and they succeeded in organising a section without a guarantee fund, and neither of them received a farthing of salary or any personal profit whatever. They did the work well, and both visitors and exhibitors seem to be satisfied. Sir George Birdwood, a correspondent writes us, did not go over to the opening; he does not expect to go to the Exhibition at all; and at any rate he would not go over at the cost of any one but himself. Mr. Vincent Robinson went over to Paris at his own charges and was considerably out of pocket; Mr. Walter, the Superintendent in the employ of the exhibitors, is the only person who gets any emolument, direct or indirect, out of the Indian section of the Exhibition; he receives a small stipend from the exhibitors themselves for services rendered. The architect got a fee of £200 for the building—a very elaborate and ingenious structure, showing great taste and fertility of resource. As to the refusal of space for Mr. Risley's Archæological collection, we believe the fact to be that application was made six months too late. Had application been made at an earlier date, it would almost certainly have been allowed space, and would have been welcomed. Sir George Birdwood, we hear, had nothing whatever to do with the exclusion: he would have been very well pleased if the collection had formed part of the Indian section of the Exhibition. As for the "Colinderies"—the Indian and Colonial Exhibition of 1886—the India Office had nothing to do with that undertaking, beyond allowing the Government of India to spend £10,000 on it, and everybody in charge of it was appointed by that Government. They appointed Mr. Royle their Agent, and sent Dr. Watt and Babu Mukharji in charge of the collections. Sir E. Buck had also an honorary position in connection with the Indian wing of that Exhibition. Sir George Birdwood has none—either honorary or paid. He was a Royal Commissioner, and a member of the Finance Committee, and in the latter capacity induced Messrs. King and Co. to take over to London the Native workmen under Sir J. W. Tyler—one of the most attractive features of the Exhibition. Sir George Birdwood never got any emolument whatever out of previous Exhibitions. He is versed in Indian Art and Industries—as much so, perhaps, as any living Englishman—and has done much to popularise Indian Art. He is a man of culture, literary power, and imaginative faculty. But if the truth were known he is perhaps now sorry that he has done so much to bring Indian Art into prominence, seeing that for his reward he is described as desiring to pose as an expert. He is so far from entertaining any such desire that he scarcely conceals his fear that the book on Indian carpets, which he jointly brought out in collaboration with another authority on such subjects, may have served to degrade Indian Art—first, by leading to a servile copying of the illustrations all over India, and afterwards by the copying them in England, and the copyists underselling and discouraging the Indian hand-workers. All the same, this work is now in its third edition. As for Sir George Birdwood's being a "professional exhibitionist" (whatever that may mean), his advice has on more than one occasion been against India's undertaking any outlay on exhibitions which are not likely to benefit the Indian people. So far from always desiring to keep matters in his own hands, he was mainly, if not solely, instrumental in transferring to the South Kensington Museum all the collections of the India Office Museum. Those collections are now accessible to, and seen by, a very much larger public than ever frequented the Leadenhall-street or Whitehall Museum. And the transfer has saved India over £10,000 a-year of direct outlay, besides enlisting the sympathies of a larger number of cultured and art-loving Europeans and Americans in Indian arts, Indian industries, and Indian affairs than ever would have given a thought to such matters under old India Office Museum system.

(Englishman.)

Mr. Samuel Smith, having launched a vote of censure on the Government of India for encouraging drunkenness, and moved for the abolition of the "iniquitous" opium trade, has crowned his many daring achievements by drawing Lord Cross on the factory question. The Secretary of State, we regret to be compelled to say, is very easily drawn. A model permanent official, cautious, patient industrious, accurate he lacks many of the most necessary qualities for his present office, and chief of all he lacks a sense of humour. There is something so grotesque in Mr. Samuel Smith standing up in the House of Commons and demanding law and justice for the miserable, downtrodden factory hands in India, that one is naturally inclined to suspect him of a deliberate effort to amuse the House. But in the eyes of Lord Cross, at least, this is no laughing matter. Over the shoulder of Mr. Samuel Smith he sees the anxious faces of the English mill-owners peering forth. Their case is, no doubt, serious enough. Business has long been in a too different way, and now the last straw is placed on the back of the much-enduring beast by India forsooth. What right has a "foreign" country like India to interfere with an established English industry? Is the golden monopoly of Lancashire to go to the dogs because of a pack of unclad and unreclaimed heathen? Perish India rather! Down with these wretched, upstart mills in Bombay, which had no right to exist? The Government of India must, indeed, have been sadly neglecting its duty to the mill-owners of Lancashire when it allowed the Parsis of Bombay to do more than play at being manufacturers.

It is upon this vision that Lord Cross has fixed his attention. He sees Lancashire in a white heat, and he knows that if the aid that is asked for is refused, the vote of Lancashire will go against the party at the next election. The Secretary of State is in great distress. Having appealed to the oracle in India and been answered in no uncertain voice, he is constrained forthwith to fly in the oracle's face, and to do the thing that is forbidden for the sake of votes in the future. A strong Secretary of State would act differently, but Lord Cross is wofully weak where party interests are concerned. What does it matter to him what injury is done to one of the most promising branches of industry in India? What if mill-owners are ruined, and large bodies of natives are turned adrift to starve? What if the mischief goes further, and the channel of trade is permanently diverted? The country as a whole must suffer, the burden falling eventually upon the native population. It is the fashion on either side of the House for party leaders to pose as loving friends of the natives of India. We had a striking illustration of this lately at the time of the "black man" episode. The two sides vied with each other in expressions of sympathy and devotion. Short vowed an ardent brotherly attachment; while Codlin never tired of asserting that he was the friend, not Short. Now, however, that the object of all this interest and effusiveness is in some trouble, who is going to take his part? With the displeasure of Lancashire casting a shadow on the path, there is not much chance, we fear, of assistance from either side. India will have to learn once more that English politicians are capable of extraordinary acts. If it is thought that we are doing an injustice to the character of the Secretary of State, we can only point to the facts of the case. He is confronted with a difficulty in Parliament, and turns to the Government of India for information and counsel. The Government strongly urges a certain course for which it gives ample and incontrovertible reasons. Lord Cross immediately advises the diametrically opposite course, and apparently gives no reasons whatever. Are we to blame for supposing that the reasons which have swayed the Secretary of State to decide against the interests of India and in favour of those of Lancashire have to do with party prospects?

AGRICULTURAL INSTRUCTION FOR COVENANTED OFFICERS.

(Madras Mail.)

Nearly twenty years ago Surgeon-General Cornish, in his admirable Census Report, wrote:—"As an observer of passing phenomena I have marvelled at the fact that while the candidates for the higher administrative offices in the Civil Service in India are required to possess a familiar acquaintance with Greek plays and the differential calculus, a knowledge of farming on scientific principles, which would be practically useful to those serving in the Revenue branch of the Service, is omitted from the list of accomplishments that the young candidates are required to show proficiency in." The Famine Commissioners, writing ten years later, gave particular prominence—amongst the measures they proposed "to secure the introduction of better methods of cultivation, and for the diffusion and application of a scientific knowledge of agriculture"—to their recommendation that arrangements should be made to afford young officers an opportunity of obtaining some technical training in agriculture, especially those likely to be engaged in connection with the administration of the land. They proposed that such officers should be specially selected to undergo two years' training in a systematic course of agricultural study, and that they should afterwards spend a year on a selected farm. But the Civil Service Commissioners have shown no anxiety to meet the recommendations of the Famine Commissioners by affording candidates for the Civil Service in India facilities for gaining such knowledge, or by offering any inducements to such candidates to go through a course of agriculture. Agricultural Chemistry has recently been added to the other optional subjects in the Natural Science section of the Examinations, and a good practical knowledge of this subject carries more weight than a similar knowledge of Zoology, Botany, or Geology; for this there is every reason to be thankful. This is, however, but one step in the right direction. The Commissioners point out that candidates are selected on the ground of superior proficiency in the subjects included in the range of an ordinary English education, and that the probationary period of two years is intended to afford selected candidates the opportunity to acquire the special knowledge necessary for them in the position which they hope to attain. This period is sufficiently long for the object in view, and the allowances granted are liberal; but the Commissioners seem to have an erroneous conception as to the character and amount of special knowledge required by officers employed in the Civil Service of this country. If Law, and the vernacular languages are excluded there is really nothing prescribed in the scheme of examinations which may be regarded as a test of the special knowledge required.

A large proportion of the time of the selected candidates must be given to the study of Law, and much inducement is offered to the study of the classical languages. The marks allotted for Law are 1,250, whereas the highest possible marks for a pass in one of the subjects of the Natural Science section does not carry more than 350 marks. A knowledge of agriculture should at least be valued as highly as a knowledge of Law in estimating the fitness of a candidate for employment in the revenue branch of the Civil Service. The authorities, it is believed, admit this, but they appear to see insurmountable obstacles in the way of selected candidates taking up the study of agriculture in such a manner as to prove a useful employment of the limited portion of their probationary period. But this arises from a misconception. It will not be contended that the amount of study given by a selected candidate to Law is sufficient to entitle him to be considered a lawyer, and it is not proposed to make farmers of the candidates. The Commissioners have defined Agricultural Chemistry as "the application of the general principles of Chemistry to the special class of problems connected with agriculture, with special reference to manures, the raising of crops, and the feeding of farm stock." What is recommended is that for Agricultural Chemistry the principles of agriculture should be substituted, and that, this subject should take its place side by side with Law as a compulsory subject. It would not be more difficult to afford opportunities for the study of the principles of agriculture than it has been to afford such opportunities for the study of Law.

There is an ample field in the experience of most Civil Servants for the application of a knowledge of agriculture, and it is not too much to say that from the want of such a knowledge the interests of the country have greatly suffered. It is notorious that such appointments as Director of Agriculture, Director of the Settlement Department, Superintendent of a State Farm, and similar appointments closely connected with agriculture are frequently held by men who have gone through no regular course of training, and who have no special interest in agriculture. It is hoped that the time is not far distant when it will be deemed as essential in India that a man should undergo a systematic training in agriculture before he is permitted to undertake agricultural duties under the State as that State employés in the Forest, or Engineering branches of the Service, should have been trained in forestry and in engineering respectively. It may not be necessary to contend that men who are to be employed almost exclusively in agricultural duties should possess an acquaintance with at least the principles of agriculture, for this is generally admitted. But it is too frequently forgotten that in the words of the Famine Commissioners' report, "Agriculture preponderates over all interests and employment in which the people of India are engaged" and that the administration cannot be successfully conducted unless the interests of agriculture receive due consideration and attention. The fact that a large proportion of the time of the Covenanted officers of Government is taken up by the agricultural duties of their appointments is recognised in the Financial Department by the fact that it is usual to debit against the land as much as two-thirds of the amount paid to these officers in salaries. Assuming that this is a fair way of apportioning the expenditnre, it would not be unreasonable to conclude that the agricultural duties which these officers have to perform preponderate in importance over their other duties. The fact that the Civil Service Commissioners have authorised the admission of Agricultural Chemistry, very broadly defined, into the list of subjects in which the candidate for the Indian Civil Service may prove his proficiency, is evidence that the subject is attracting some attentlon. Candidates who pass their period of probation at a College or University approved by the Secretary of State are granted an allowance of £300, and permission can be obtained by candidates going up for a degree to stay an additional year in England after the expiration of their probationary two years, a bonus of £150 being available to those who are successful in obtaining a degree. This concession practically extended the period of special training to three years. If the Secretary of State is prepared to give £150 more for a candidate who has gained an ordinary literary degree, which may or may not increase the usefulness of the candidate, he might at least offer the same for a candidate who has secured a diploma of agriculture. Some candidates when at Oxford do attend a few lectures on agriculture, but this is done in a half-hearted way. The fact has not been overlooked that a few Indian Covenanted officers have spent considerable portions of their furlough in England in going through regular courses of agriculture, and these gentlemen are entitled to every credit for so doing; but is this the best way in which to employ a well earned furlough? To some men change of work is equivalent to rest, but such men are exceptions; and in the case of the majority of Indian Civilians furlough could be more advantageously spent than in going through a stiff course of agricultural training.

THE SILVER QUESTION AND THE INDIAN WHEAT EXPORTS.

(Statesman.)

It is a source of gratification to note that the Englishman has joined the ranks of the bi-metallic party. Ten or twelve years ago there was practical unanimity on the subject in Calcutta, our merchants and Chamber of Commerce giving full support to the demand for the rehabilitation of silver. A few years later (1883) a complete change of views on the subject had taken place, and the majority apparently of our merchants had come to believe that what was really a national calamity was a source of advantage to our export trade. Were the fact even so, nothing could be more certain than that it was an act of political immorality for any civilised Government whatever, that had established a standard of value by legal enactment, to permit that standard either to rise or fall in value, unless it could be clearly shown that the State had really no power to rectify the aberration that had taken place. India could put forward no plea of this kind, when almost every other civilised government had recognised the obligation. Holland had taken instant steps to fulfil it upon discerning what was impending in 1873, and was followed by France and the other States of the Latin Union. The United States followed suit in 1878, by enacting Mr. Bland's Bill, which was simply a measure that we had ourselves urged upon the Government of India from the early months of 1876.

A notion had seized hold of the minds of our mercantile men that the State was under no obligation whatever to protect the standard of value from any aberration therein. It was admitted that it was the duty of the State to see that the standards of length, capacity and weight were preserved intact, but that it was under a precisely similar obligation with respect to the standard of value was in the most extraordinary way denied. What we were virtually told was—and we are to this hour acting upon the assumption—that although the value of silver fell to the price of copper, or rose to the price of platinum, the State had no concern therewith. That it was the State that had prescribed the standard, and was consequently pledged to preserve it, was hardly acknowledged anywhere in India six years ago. We have said little upon the subject for some time past, as there was nothing to say that was not axiomatic, and had been said twenty times before. The Englishman was one of the journals which held the popular delusion in continuance, but we are most glad to have noted its honest avowal for some time past that the attitude of the Government could not possibly be defended on the subject. In its issue of the 19th inst. it writes:—

"The Indian export of wheat," it was gravely asserted, "has been enormously stimulated by the recent fall in the price of silver, the depreciation operating exactly as an export bounty of eight shillings per quarter!" Without troubling to enter upon a long refutation of a statement so opposed to facts, we may take occasion to say that, dating from 1881-82, the first year in which the Indian wheat trade assumed any importance, there has been no expansion worth speaking of. In four out of the succeeding seven years there was a falling off, and in the remaining three only a slight increase in the total shipments. The average annual shipments for the seven years were 896,000 tons, against 993,000 tons in 1881-82. The following figures, showing the total exports of Indian wheat in each year, should suffice to dispose once and for all of the "stimulus" theory so generally believed in at one time:—

	Tons.
1881-82	993,000
1882-83	707,000
1883-84	1,048,000
1884-85	791,500
1885-86	1,053,000
1886-87	1,113,000
1887-88	677,000
1888-89	881,000

Exchange, in the meantime, fell from 1s. 8d. to 1s. 4d., and silver from 51d. to 42d. an ounce. In the same period the total value of Indian imports, excluding only Government stores, has grown by over 22 crores of rupees, while our exports have increased by less than 16 crores. If we exclude treasure, the results differ but slightly. How our exports have been "stimulated" is, then, not very clear.

Now our readers will remember how earnestly we strove five or six years ago to demonstrate the delusion under which so many of our merchants and banks laboured at the time. All that the continuous fall in the value of silver has done for India is, that it has reduced heavily the return which the ryot has received for his wheat, by placing it in competition with the wheat grown by the English farmer and the farmers of the United States, Russia, and Egypt. The continuous fall in silver has placed our surplus Indian wheat in the English market, at a price that has ruined the English farmer, and the Russian, Egyptian, American, and Canadian growers of wheat. The Indian supply, meanwhile, instead of being a supply upon which England can depend for the sustenance of her people—is a purely casual one, upon which no reliance whatever can be placed. Indian wheat may be thrown, now and again, upon the English market, flooding it for a while at prices that are casual only. Would it not really have been better for Indian as well as English and foreign wheat growers, that the price of Indian wheat should have reflected the normal cost of its production, at a stable exchange value between the currencies of these countries. As matters are, the price at which Indian wheat can be placed on the English market depends upon the accident of an ever fluctuating exchange. There is nothing normal or stable about it whatever. It is a pure accident what the price of Indian wheat may be, while it dislocates trade altogether.

BENGAL.

BUSINESS in Calcutta was seriously suspended for three days owing to a strike amongst the hackery wallahs, who objected to the payment of a registration fee which a newly established Cart Agency, supported by a number of Europeans firms, wished to impose on all who agreed to work under its control.

THE Chief Justice, Sir Comer Petheram, has been presented with a congratulatory address on his recovery from his late illness by all classes of the Native Community of Calcutta, both Hindus and Mahomedans.

WITH regard to the collapse of the Jynthee Bridge, on the E. I. R., a Calcutta paper says:—This is a large bridge of several spans of 80 feet Warren girders. These girders, being considered weak for the heavy traffic, were lately strengthened by building piers in the middle. It is surmised that the water-way was so much blocked up by these additional supports that the flood scoured out and undermined two of the piers, which, together with one span of girders, have fallen. Luckily no one was hurt, and no damage done beyond that to the bridge itself. As the scene of the accident is on the chord line, the direct route to the North-West is now closed, all traffic being diverted to the old single loop. Calcutta is now only joined to the North-West by a narrow thread, and this must always be the case until Government can make up its mind to sanction an alternative route such as the Bengal North-West Railway has offered to construct.

THE new Calcutta Municipal Loan of 5 lakhs, tenders for which were opened on Wednesday afternoon, was in much request. No less than 113 tenders, aggregating Rs.39,26,600, were received, of which 61 tenders for Rs.26,67,000 were at 105 or upwards. Rs.105-13 was the lowest successful tender, and the highest was at Rs.108.

THE following is from a Calcutta paper of the 21st:—"Mr. C. J. G. Paterson, of the North British Mercantile Insurance Company, who left for Europe last night, will be much missed by his many friends and by Calcutta society. Apart from his recognised abilities as a business man, during his three years' stay Mr. Paterson has been active and prominent, both in the cause of charity and in promoting our amusements and recreations, to a degree which speaks volumes for his powers of work as well as for his good nature. One of the most useful and judicious members of the District Charitable Society, he was at the same time Secretary to the Calcutta Cricket Club and to the Assembly Balls, and for the last two years a most successful organiser of the St. Andrew's Dinner. The good wishes of an unusually large circle, who will be glad to welcome Mr. Paterson back, accompany him."

MADRAS.

(June 30.)

THE Madras Mail states that a painful sensation was caused in Madras during the course of last week by the republication by two local journals of paragraphs extracted from the London Echo, the Birmingham Post, the Yorkshire Post, and a Scottish paper, setting forth that, according to information derived from an authoritative quarter, a Governor of an Indian Presidency, whose wife lately quitted India, had entered an action for divorce against her in the London Divorce Court, and that he would probably relinquish his appointment in order to prosecute the case. It was further alleged that a surgeon-major had been named as co-respondent, and that heavy damages were claimed. Under this thin disguise, reference was obviously intended to Lord Connemara, and this Presidency is entitled to know whether these circumstantial statements have any foundation in fact. We are happy to be able to state that there is not the slightest truth in any of these statements. No action of any description has been initiated or contemplated by Lord Connemara, nor has he any idea of relinquishing his appointment until the expiration, two and a half years hence, of the usual term of gubernatorial office.

BOMBAY.

THE scheme prepared by Mr. Eliot for a storm-warning service for the Bombay ports has been finally completed, and now only awaits the approval of the Bombay Government to be carried into effect.

A NATIVE paper says:—"We regret to find that Pundita Rambai was hooted the other day at a public meeting at Poona, which she wanted to address on the child-marriage question. Whatever may be the differences of opinion with the Pundita and her countrymen, the lady who has given proofs of the presence of many estimable qualities in her deserves to be at least listened to with respect and attention. Moreover, she is a woman, and it is too ungallant and rude for any party of educated men to hoot her at a public gathering."

AT the meetings of the Faculties of Arts and Law held on the 24th ult. at the University Buildings, the Hon. Mr. P. M. Mehta and the Hon. Mr. F. L. Latham were elected Deans, respectively, of the two Faculties.

DR. MACONACHIE is going to stand as a member of the Corporation for the University in place of Mr. Jevanjee Jamsetjee Mody, who has resigned.

A PARSEE firm of saddlers, boot and harness makers at Bombay have received lately a large order for boots and shoes from the Amir of Afghanistan. They are made upon the design of a Russian pattern supplied to them from Kabul.

THE Sind Gazette complains bitterly:—We learn that there is a great paucity of Assistant Collectors in this Province at the present time. Out of 14 officers of this class sanctioned by Government for the 12 divisions of Sind, we find that there are but six on active duty, viz., Messrs. Bolton, Tyndall, Gamble, Price, Mules, Moore, and McKenzie, and one of these (Mr. Moore) is about to proceed on leave, we hear, in a few days. How is it possible, we ask, for the Province to be properly administered in the present state of things? Transfers of officers from one division to another have been so frequent that in consequence only two or three Assistant Collectors will be in a position to write up their administration reports for the past year from materials collected by themselves. Again, the scarcity of officers has necessitated some of them being put in charge of two divisions at a time, and when it is remembered that sub-divisions in Sind are twice as large as those in the Presidency proper, some idea may be formed of the amount of work devolving on those already overworked officials. Civil Servants will not, if they can help it, come to Sind, and when they do, they try and get away either on transfer or on leave as soon as they can.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MICAH CLARKE.*

Of all the periods of English history, few, if any, excel in interest or importance the cycle which witnessed the outburst of religion in the seventeenth century. It is customary in some quarters to speak of the strange race of puritanical enthusiasts with scorn and derision—their very name is a by-word and a reproach amongst those who incline to the view that the keys of Heaven are in the hands of the Bishops and Pastors of the flock. Priestcraft has no love for Nonconformity. Yet the student of history can scarcely fail to see and to applaud in the old traditional "Barebones" of the Cromwellian epoch, in the familiar "Praise the Lord," in the much despised Ebenezers, "Jonases," and the such like, dogged determination and fiery zeal which brooked no opposition. Nor is it difficult to realise that the spirit which found expression in fervent piety and untempered enthusiasm is traceable to the self-same qualities which have made Englishmen the foremost nation in the world's history.

What the nation owes to the religious revival of this interesting period in our annals can scarcely be over-estimated, and Mr. Doyle has done well to lay the scenes of his most fascinating narrative in the stirring times which heralded the downfall of Royal absolutism and kingly oppression. True, the Duke of Monmouth, on whose attempt to seize the Crown of England the plot of the whole story is based, was an arrant, contemptible coward, possessed of scarce a virtue which could command respect or extort homage; but n'importe, the lesser characters amply make up for any want of heroism which their leader lacked. From the first chapter to the last line of the tale interest never flags; there are adventures and to spare; no sooner does the reader recover from the thrilling escapes of one person than he is filled with alarm and anxiety as to the fate of another character on the scene; and, withal, the whole text is characterised by a modesty and absence of arrogance as unusual as it is refreshing. If to these advantages be added that the tone of the work is distinctly good, that there is not an equivocal sentence placed in the mouth of a speaker at any time or under any conditions, enough has been written to evidence that Mr. Doyle is entitled to the gratitude of all who can appreciate a distinctly able, interesting, and thrilling romance of history.

A PREVENTIVE AGAINST SMALL-POX.—The Oudh Akhbar claims to have discovered, from the Muhammadan Lancet, an infallible preventive against small-pox, which was hitherto unknown to the public. It says that as soon as the child is born its body should be rubbed gently with black Lahori salt, before giving the usual bath with hot water. By this means the body of the child would be disinfected, and so long as the child lives it will never contract any epidemic, and specially small-pox.

SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1889.

THE MORALISTS AND THE MAMLUTDARS.

THE debate in the House on the question raised by Dr. Cameron may have had the effect, as a Society paper states, of driving away the majority of the members who stood up in support of the motion for adjournment, and of putting Lord Hartington to sleep; but it gave certain gentlemen who know nothing at all about India an opportunity of saying much on what they did not understand. It cannot be denied that the Government of Bombay, in its perhaps righteous determination to bring home to Mr. Crawford the offences of which it believed him guilty, took a very dangerous step when it offered an immunity to the Mamlutdar witnesses. It then sowed the wind, and it is now reaping the whirlwind. The opportunity of keeping up the tempest was not to be lost by such rigid moralists as Messrs. Cameron, Bradlaugh and Bauman. The anxiety which they displayed to uphold the purity of the Indian Bench was very edifying; but as they did not know what a Mamlutdar really, was their zeal was not tempered by either knowledge or discretion. Mr. Bauman may hold that it is the business of the Secretary of State to overrule the decisions of the Government of India when these do not meet with the approval of certain gentlemen who insist upon meddling in Indian matters for party or personal purposes; but the good sense of the House of Commons is not likely to endorse this dictum. The Government of Bombay was wrong in making the promise of indemnity it did; but having made it the Secretary of State could not, as Sir J. Gorst explained, repudiate the engagement without throwing the whole Government of Bombay into confusion. That this argument should be held to be a fallacious one by Dr. Cameron and Mr. Bradlaugh was natural enough, nor were they likely to be convinced by Mr. Bryce's argument that the crime of the Mamlutdars was "a very little one" in the eyes of the natives. But Mr. Bryce was perfectly correct in his assertion—"The hon. member for Glasgow said that the natives could not regard the courts of these Mamlutdars as courts of justice at all; but that was not the way in which they looked at the matter. If certain Mamlutdars were known to have obtained their offices through the influence of other Natives, or to have given some consideration for them, the people of India did not think any worse of those particular magistrates than they did of others." Sir George Campbell went further—perhaps a little too much so—"When hon. members showed such a state of extreme holy horror at the purchase of offices in India, they seemed altogether to forget that in historical times such things were not unknown even in this country; and that even to this day ecclesiastical offices were bought and sold." But the best thing which Sir George said was that "he was not prepared to go into details, because he did not think the House would understand them." This said seriously, and with no intention of humour, took the House immensely, and they "laughed consumedly." Possibly it was not without its effect on Dr. Cameron himself, for he asked permission to withdraw his motion, admitting that the subject "would be better discussed after notice."

But how about Mr. Bradlaugh—the "member for India?" Is he still horror-struck at native corruption? If he protest too much, he may find himself deserted by his dusky friends whom he now pretends to represent, and who supply him with "grievances" against British rule in India. For by the present mail there comes from India a paper called Native Opinion, which he must recognise as a guide; and this paper, commenting upon the action of the Government of Bombay in suspending the incriminated magistrates from their judicial functions in accordance with the orders of the Secretary of State, says:—"The enormity of the present action of the Bombay Government is so great that every institution in the country should protest against it.

Digitized by Google

The protesting voice must be so loud as to reach the ear of England's people and our gracious Queen. Lord Cross may not realise the full importance of his orders, but it is our duty to make him understand that if he values the supremacy of England in this country, and if above all he has any respect for the fair name of England, he will at once countermand the resolutions that have been issued by the Bombay Government in the matter of these Mamlutdars." This is what Mr. Bradlaugh's Indian constituents think and say If he wishes to retain their esteem and confidence he had better be careful in what he again may say about "corruption."

THE services of Colonels F. Brooke and E. W. Miller have been replaced at the disposal of the Military Department.

THE B.I.S.N. CO.'S ENGINEERS.—The engineers of the B.I.S.N. Co. have sent into the Calcutta office a petition asking that their salaries be increased 25 per cent., and that they may be allowed to remit home a third of their salary at par, instead of a fourth, as at present. There are upwards of four hundred engineers in the service of the company, and considerable excitement has existed among those interested as to the result of their appeal. As affairs presently are, many, especially of the unmarried men, seem desirous of pushing their demands to the fullest extent; but those who have others depending on them for a livelihood are not likely to follow this policy. The B.I.S.N. Co. is said to have the largest mercantile fleet in the world, and the men assert that their demands are only for such wage as is ruling in the market. We hope, in the interests of the general public, that an amicable settlement will be arrived at. In this connection we may mention that the efforts on the part of the steamboat owners upon the Pacific coast to reduce the wages of the licensed officers of the vessels were a failure, for as fast as the steamers came in they were made fast at the dock and the crews walked ashore, nor could any men be procured to fill their places; hence wages were restored.—Id.

THE NATIVE STATES OF INDIA.

Under the auspices of the East India Association a meeting of officers and gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held in Westminster Town Hall, on Monday, June 24th, Sir W. Guyer Hunter, M.P., in the chair, for the purpose of considering the relations of the Indian Government with the Native States. The principal address was given by Mr. Uma Sankar Misra, M.A. (deputy magistrate on leave), who urged that of all questions affecting the interest of the Native States the education of the rulers is the most important, for the good government of a state must necessarily depend upon the capacity, education and intelligence of its chief. The people are gradually awakening to the thousand blessings of a good government visible in the British administered provinces; and, under the new circumstances, there arises the necessity of having Native Rulers, who, while retaining some of their ancestral habits of manliness, thrift, and martial spirit, should combine in their own persons a liberal education, experience in routine administration, and some sort of military training. The principles established in the training of the royal youths of Rajputana at the Ajmere College should be extended to every part of India, supplemented by two or three military schools. While, on the other hand, the British Government should afford facilities to attain the desired end; on the other hand the feudatory chiefs ought to adopt the British system of government in general, and extend, withal, local government among their own people. The expansion and development of the Native States, the Imperial necessities of the Peninsula, and many other considerations make it desirable that the policy of the British Government should undergo slight changes, so as to suit the altered conditions of the Native States and the country generally. The Government should help the Native States to organise their military resources by lending them British officers, and when their armies have been brought up to a state of efficiency it should employ them in an emergency for Imperial defence and in federal union. In concluding an able and elaborate address, Mr. Misra said that, under the British Protectorate, the Indian chiefs are destined to play a prominent part, if they choose to avail themselves of the facilities which a humane and enlightened Government like the British régime in India affords.—At the close of the discussion a vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Misra and the Chairman.

PRESENTATION OF AN ADDRESS TO THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.—At the meeting of the Lodges held on St. John's Eve there was exhibited the casket which is to contain the address presented to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught by the Freemasons of this place. It was universally admired, which is no matter of surprise, as it is a perfect little gem of the jeweller's art, and redounds the greatest credit on the workers, Messrs. Weber and Schenck, jewellers and watchmakers of this city. The casket itself is of finely polished bamboo, capped at either end with silver wrought into elegant designs. Its supports are two combinations of the square and compass, the point of the square being embedded in the rich dark blue plush with which the pedestal is lined. The pedestal is of walnut, with rosewood inlaid. The inscription is on a silver scroll, placed in the centre of the casket. Taking it as a whole, the ornament is unique and artistic, and we are sure that the Royal Mason will cherish it as one of the dearest souvenirs of his visit to the capital of the chief Native State in India.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JULY 16.

—o—

INDIAN GRIEVANCES.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the First Lord of the Treasury with reference to his notice of an amendment to No. 51 of the Standing Orders, in order to enable a discussion on general questions of Indian administration to take place as formerly on the introduction of the Indian Budget, whether he would afford any facilities for discussing this amendment this Session before the debate on the Indian Budget.

Mr. W. H. SMITH said he thought it would not be convenient this Session to discuss the alteration of the Standing Orders in regard to one point such as that suggested by the hon. member, but Her Majesty's Government would give their consideration to the point with a view of seeing whether any alteration ought to be made.

JULY 18.

THE DROUGHT IN GANJAM.

In answer to Mr. BRADLAUGH,

Sir J. GORST said: The Madras revenue system provides for remission of land revenue in case of drought. The rule will no doubt be acted on in Ganjam, but it is too early yet to obtain reliable information as to the amount of remission granted.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked whether, on former occasions, loss of life had not resulted from tardiness in obtaining information.

Sir J. GORST said there existed in India famine Codes which had been settled after great care and consideration, and any rash or undue interference with them was likely to result in disaster.

JULY 19.

RELATIONS WITH THIBET.

Mr. BRYCE asked the Under Secretary for India what was the present position of the negotiations with the Governments of Thibet and of China regarding Sikkim, and what prospect there was of a settlement of the questions that had arisen and a restoration of peaceful relations with Thibet.

Sir J. GORST said that his noble friend the Secretary of State directed him to say, that in his opinion no statement could be at present made respecting the relation between Thibet and China without detriment to the public service.

Mr. BRYCE asked whether any Parliamentary papers on this subject could be laid before Parliament within a reasonable time in the course of the next few months.

Sir J. FERGUSSON: I do not think that it will be possible to present papers on the subject during the present Session.

OFFICIAL CORRUPTION IN INDIA.

Dr. CAMERON, having obtained leave in the usual way, moved the adjournment of the House, "for the purpose of calling attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance—namely, the retention by the Government of Bombay in judicial and administrative offices of magistrates and officials who have sworn that they corruptly purchased their positions by means of bribes, and whom the Judges of the High Court of Judicature of the Presidency have pronounced to be legally disqualified by their corruption from retaining office." The proceedings, the hon. member said, arose out of charges against Mr. Crawford, who occupied a prominent position in the Civil Service of India. He had frequently called attention to the subject, but had obtained no satisfactory information. He wanted to know the principle upon which the Government of India were dealing with the men who had been guilty of corruption. If they promised to retain in office these men, who admitted that they had purchased their positions as magistrates by bribes, they were not acting up to the terms of their arrangement, because some men had been dismissed while others had been removed to different districts, and their duties discharged by clerks. The Judges of the High Court who had expressed an opinion on this matter had declared that the retention of these Native mamlutdars in the service was illegal and a contravention of the Constitution. The Government, in the papers laid before Parliament, had ignored the opinion of the Judges, and had, in fact, presented a one-sided view of the case.

Sir J. GORST said it would be more conducive to the interests of the Indian Empire if hon. members waited until the action of the Secretary of State was complete, and then expressed an opinion as to whether he had rightly exercised the functions imposed on him. The position of affairs in the matter to which the hon. member had called attention was a difficult one from the first, because in order to obtain evidence to lay before the Crawford Commission the Government of Bombay had promised immunity from prosecution to any person who gave evidence, and, in cases of payment for promotion or to obtain or avoid transfers, immunity was guaranteed from official or departmental punishment or loss, subject to the stipulation that they told the truth. This was before the subject came under the cognisance of the Secretary of State. While he agreed it was a great misfortune that such an indemnity was given, he would remind the House that the whole government of Bombay would have been thrown into confusion had the Secretary of State repudiated the engagement. By the order of the Secretary of State, however, all those who had purchased office had been suspended from the exercise of judicial functions, and the question whether they should retain office at all deserved and would receive the anxious consideration of the Secretary of State when the full information had arrived from India to enable him to form a correct judgment. The Government of Bombay had not retained in office any official whom they had found to be corrupt. He was extremely sorry that this question had been brought forward without notice, because if he had only had half an hour's previous intimation he would have been able, by reference to documents, to have given a fuller and clearer reply. He could, however, assure the House that if the matter were left in the hands of the Secretary for India he would take care that no injustice was done.

Mr. BRADLAUGH thought the hon. member who had called attention to the matter deserved the thanks of the House, but would advise him not to press the motion to a division.

The discussion was continued by Mr. BAUMANN, Mr. BRYCE, Sir G. CAMPBELL, Sir W. PLOWDEN and Dr. CAMERON, and the motion, by leave, was withdrawn.

SIR RICHARD MEADE ON THE PRINCES OF INDIA.

At the recent meeting of the East India Association, when Mr. Misra read a Paper on the Native Princes of India, General Sir Richard Meade, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., in the course of a very able speech said:—I appear before you as an Indian official, whose life for more than thirty-five years was passed in Native States. It was my lot, from the time I was a young man, to be closely associated with almost all the principal Chiefs of a great part of India, amongst them Maharajas Sindhia and Holkar, and all the Chiefs of Central India, the Maharaja of Mysore, the Gaikwar of Baroda, and his Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad. Mr. Misra, in his Paper, touches at some length on the question of the education of the Native Chiefs. I have for many years past, from an experience of a long and intimate acquaintance with the Chiefs, been of opinion that their education on a proper and reasonable system is a matter of the very first importance for the welfare of India, and I have done all in my power with the Government of India, and so far as my own personal influence extended, to give effect to these views. The truth is that the whole system of Indian Administration has changed within the last thirty years, or since the Mutiny. Previous to that period, very little was known by Europeans of the Native States, except by those employed in them, and these States then occupied a position that was in many respects different from that of the British portion of the Peninsula. But now the whole are brought into such close relations that it is essential to the general welfare of India that the Native Chiefs shall adopt a system of government that is, to a certain extent, in accord with that of the British Government. The old ideal of a Native Ruler was a Prince who was entitled to govern his country and people as he pleased, and might, if he liked, make his state almost a desert; and I would point to districts in Native territory that were in former times thus ruined, by misrule and the rapacity of the officials. Now that sort of thing cannot be allowed to continue under the new state of things the British Government has established in India. The Native Chiefs have certain rights, and we are bound to respect their rights, but we are clearly entitled to claim that they shall rule fairly and justly, shall adopt just laws, and shall abstain from and shall discountenance the old practices of spoliation, which put the lives and belongings of all classes in a Native State at the mercy of the Government and its officials. Our obligations to support the Native Chiefs in their position render any attempts on the part of their people to resist misrule hopeless, and instances have not been wanting in which, but for British support, the Chiefs concerned would probably have been driven from their dominions. Therefore, I say, the responsibility is imposed on the British Government of taking proper steps to protect the people in Native territory against injustice and misgovernment at the hands of their rulers. We cannot, of course, expect that Native Chiefs will rule entirely on the system and principles that we ourselves have adopted. Our system is in many respects different from their own, and it requires a class of men to work it, that Native Chiefs, as a rule, have not at command and could not easily procure. Our Government is, speaking broadly, a Government for the people. It is not a Government for the benefit of any individual. The revenues it collects are to a great extent spent on the country and for the benefit of the people generally. But the ideal of a Native Ruler being what I have already stated, the revenues are, as a rule, regarded as at the disposal of the Chief for such personal or other purposes as he may think proper, and but little is expended for the benefit of the people. There are, of course, exceptions in certain States in this respect, but these do not affect the recognised rights of the Chief, if he chooses to exercise them. I will mention here, in illustration of my meaning, the case of the late Maharaja Sindhia, a Chief with whom I was associated for upwards of twenty-five years, and for whom I had a strong personal regard—a regard which one would naturally feel for a person who had protected him and his family in time of imminent peril as Maharaja Sindhia did to me and others at the mutiny of the Gwalior Contingent in 1857. I would say as little in the way of reproach towards this Chief as possible; but he was a ruler of the old type, and continued to be so till his death, and under his rule Gwalior made but little progress in the reforms and improved administration that have happily been initiated in other States. At the Maharajah's death, which occurred three or four years ago, his enormous treasure of between six and seven millions sterling in coin was found in the Gungajula or Treasury. This vast sum had been collected in the course of some twenty years from the people of Gwalior, and but little had been expended for their benefit. The Maharaja had not done more in this matter than is considered the full right of a Native Ruler. He had taken year by year what he could get from his people, and had put the surplus collections into his treasury, where they continued to accumulate till his death. Now, a new era has opened upon Gwalior, and endeavours are being made to give that country the benefits of a good and liberal government, and we who are interested in that State hope that these efforts will be successful. Then, again, the late Maharaja Holkar, with whom I was for many years associated as Governor-General's Agent in Central India, was a hard master to his subjects, many of whom he at times treated with great want of consideration and kindness. Of all the numerous Native Chiefs I have known, Maharaja Holkar was, in my opinion, one of the ablest as an administrator. He had received a better education than most Indian Princes of that period—forty-five years ago—and knew the condition and circumstances of almost every village in his country. I have for hours sat with him while he was going through the Revenue Accounts of individual villages in a way that showed me he was thoroughly conversant with their affairs. He was an improving landlord as regarded the agricultural condition of his country, and was always ready to make advances for improvements; but, of course, with a keen eye to his own interests. He, too, had an unfortunate desire to accumulate money in his treasury, the indulgence of which became a great blot on his reputation, and was most detrimental to the welfare and happiness of his people. There were many other Chiefs of whom I might speak, if there were time for my doing so. And as I have only a few minutes left I will confine my remarks to three with whom I was associated during the last twelve years of my Indian service. The Maharaja of Mysore—of whose country I was Chief Commissioner for five or six years—was carefully educated under our direction, and received the government of that fine province from us on attaining his majority. Mysore had then been fifty years under British management, and I am glad to say that the young Ruler has continued the system of administration which was established in the province during that period. I desire to speak of the young Maharaja with the greatest respect. He has shown himself to be in every way a well-disposed and promising Ruler, and is doing all in his power to improve the condition of his people. The Maharaja of Baroda, in whose succession to the Chiefship I was personally concerned—for the arrangements for his selection and adoption by the widow of a Gaikwar were entrusted to me by the Government of India—was also carefully educated, and is a painstaking and conscientious Prince, and is really endeavouring to rule his country justly and well. Lastly, his Highness the Nizam, who is the first of the Native Chiefs of India, received a special education during his minority, and ought to be a good and successful Ruler. Most of those present probably know that Hyderabad is an enormous country, some 80,000 square miles in extent, and that its revenues are very considerable. I am sorry to say that the traditions of Hyderabad are not in favour of the active exercise of the functions of Ruler by the Chief, the practice since the beginning of the present century having been that the Chief remained in retirement in his palace, while the government of the country was carried on by the Minister. I myself have always been of opinion that the Princes of India, from the highest to the lowest, should be trained to rule their own countries, and should not be encouraged to leave this most important part of their duty and functions as Ruler to any Minister, however able, and to resign themselves to a course of life that is inconsistent with the due performance of those great duties. I wish from my heart that his Highness the Nizam may do honour and credit to his position as Ruler of Hyderabad. He is a well-intentioned young man, and, though certain circumstances have added to the ordinary difficulties of his position, all interested in the welfare of Hyderabad hope that, as time goes on, he will become more and more competent to rule over and to administer that great country, and that his government will be a successful one. With regard to the general question of utilising the armies of the Native States, there are many points involved in it that are most difficult to deal with. I am intimately acquainted with the armies of most of the principal Native States, and their condition and circumstances. Their forces, as a rule, are maintained under a system very different from our own, advancement being obtained by interest or payment of money, and the enforcement of discipline and general efficiency not being attended to as with us. Still, I maintain that some at least of these armies, if proper steps be taken in the matter, might be made a source of strength to the Imperial Government, and I earnestly hope that the question will be thoroughly considered by the Government, and that some mode of utilising these forces may be devised with the full and hearty concurrence of the Chiefs themselves. I will only add that the details of this great question could not be discussed at a meeting like this. As regards the other subjects referred to by Mr. Misra—the civil administration of Native States is a matter that must of course depend very much on the abilities of those who rule; but I think I may say that all interested in the welfare of Native States, and of India generally, desire that the Native Chiefs shall be encouraged to adopt a system of Government which will bring them into harmony with our own system, and will enable them to share our progress. We should try to bring the Chiefs into our system, to give them an interest in it and to make them feel that their interests are bound up with our own. In former years we know that the Native Chiefs regarded the British Government in some degree as their enemy. That, no doubt, was unavoidable. War was constantly going on in all parts of India, and the British Government had no option but to fight those who attacked or opposed it, and in some cases to deprive them of their territories. For the last twenty-eight years, however, since Lord Canning's assurance that annexations should cease, and his grant of Sunnuds of Adoption to all Native Chiefs, the Chiefs of India have enjoyed the undisturbed possession of their countries and their rights—and, I may add, speaking from a considerable knowledge of the circumstances, that there is not the slightest desire on the part of the Government or its officers to interfere improperly with the chiefs. Our desire is that they shall be encouraged in everything that is right, and strengthened in every way in which they ought to be strengthened—that their position is, and must necessarily be, one of subordinate co-operation, politically, with the British Government, against which, as the head of the Empire, no Chief can venture to set himself up.

INDIA AND CEYLON TEA.

"Spectator" writes as follows to the Financial News:—

You last week opened your columns to a correspondence regarding the merits and demerits of Indian and Ceylon tea, of which the consumption in the United Kingdom now amounts to about 60 per cent. of the entire amount of tea consumed. The issue raised was as to the dietetic value of these teas compared with the teas of China, which latter are now being rapidly displaced by them. The question—which is one that has been discussed time without end—resolves itself chiefly into the consideration of the greater or less development of the so-called tannin by the process of infusion and preparation for drinking.

Now, although largely interested in Indian tea-planting, and, consequently, a strong partisan, I am prepared at the outset to concede frankly that many of the British-grown teas contain this quality to a larger extent than do China teas. (And this, I may say in passing, is precisely the cause of their having outstripped China teas in public estimation.) The fact then stands that this very strength and "grip," produced mainly by the presence of tannic acid, is wanted by the public, and is the cause of their preference for the stronger and more flavoury Indian and Ceylon tea.

Now, I am prepared (in spite of my aforesaid partnership) to make a second admission that, undoubtedly under certain conditions of preparation, this tannin in the tea is injurious to the digestive organs of the drinker. This, however, leads us to the point on which I am desirous of making an explanation, which will, I believe, be satisfactory, not only to your iconoclast correspondents, but to all thinking people who have the remotest acquaintance with the rather difficult progress of tea-making. The extraction of the tannic acid in such a way as to be injurious or beneficial to the consumer of the liquid extract produced by infusion depends entirely upon the conditions under which this process of infusion is carried out.

If, as frequently occurs, too large a quantity of a strong tea is put in the pot, or if the tea leaves are allowed to sodden in imperfectly-boiled water and for a longer time than is necessary to extract the good qualities of the tea, the infusion, especially of the strongest, the finest, and the best of Indian and Ceylon teas (to a much greater extent than with the less pungent China tea), instead of being a mild stimulant and gentle sedative, will be injurious to the stomach, and will probably produce heartburn, dyspepsia, and general "malaise."

If, instead of this, however, the tea is carefully prepared, if such quantity is put in as is compatible with the quality and strength of the kind of tea used, if the water used is fresh and freshly boiled, if thereafter the leaf is only allowed to remain in the boiling water for a moderate time and then poured off, the leaves into a separate well-warmed vessel, no evil results will supervene, and the drinker will instead find him or herself refreshed, brain and stomach alike brisked up and cheered, thirst and fatigue alike quenched, and digestion mildly stimulated.

What is wanted in this tea-drinking country is, that those who are interested in a wider extension of tea-drinking, in elevating the taste to a higher conception of what the pleasure and benefit of tea drinking is, and in the promotion of temperance, should take steps on a large and extended scale to teach the masses, as well as the classes and their servants, and more especially all those persons who are engaged in catering for the public, the proper way to treat the different kinds of tea in infusion, and I confidently believe that any such steps would be amply compensated by the large increase in consumption which would take place, and the great benefit more especially to the working classes who are the greatest tea-drinkers among us.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE MAMLUTDARS.—The Indian Spectator says:—Drowning men catch at straws. We can understand how, in their despair, the poor mamlutdars are allowing themselves to be driven from one position of danger to another still more dangerous. The demand hinted at in one quarter, for a fresh investigation into what practically comes to the whole subordinate judicial service of the Deccan, though prompted by a sense of justice, is extremely ill-advised, to say the least of it. It is needless to dilate on the point. We sincerely regret the partial withdrawal of the guarantee. The plighted word of a Government should not be compromised in any circumstances. But if a higher authority insists upon cancelling the pledge to an extent, the local Administration has only to carry out its instructions. In what spirit these instructions are being carried out, and after what struggles, may not be known till the correspondence upon the subject is allowed to be published. Suffice it to say for the present that the indemnified mamlutdars cannot have abler or better informed advocates of their rights than the Government of Bombay. We are glad, meanwhile, to see a number of mamlutdars transferred. The Forest, Salt, and other departments ought to accommodate the poor refugees, while some few cases may be met by compensation. In this way the Government can maintain the spirit of the guarantee, even though, unfortunately, it is not permitted to keep up the form.

THE INDIA COUNCIL.—The Indian Spectator welcomes the proposal to reduce the strength of the India Council by three. This is a small number that is going out, but the step, taken doubtless in anticipation, may lead up to further reform. It is something to see it acknowledged that the highest official hierarchy is not so indispensable to the well-being in India as not to be shorn of an over-growth here and there. For real improvement, however, the Council of the Secretary of State will have to be remodelled with a considerable non-official element in it, and an appreciable Indian element. As we put it two years ago, it is a misuse of words to talk of an India Council without a single Indian member on its board. It must either be reconstituted, or recognised under its proper name and title—The Asylum for Anglo-Indian Official Survivals. The few active members might then form the nucleus of a real India Council with non-official Indian and European colleagues.

A BOMBAY paper hears that Mr. Crawley-Boevey, late Collector of Surat, has made a strong representation to the Local Government suggesting that the Surat Municipal Board should for a time be suspended as a mark of disapproval for alleged mismanagement of city affairs in face of repeated warnings from Government.

GRIEVANCES OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.

(Pioneer.)

The grievances of our civil engineers are manifold, and naturally differ in intensity; but a correspondent elsewhere draws attention to one of them which, though it has seldom, if at all, been brought before the public, yet is by no means the least important of the bundle. The writer's contention that a Chief Secretary of the Public Works Department with a Provincial Government ought to find some recognition of his position in his salary seems to us undeniably forcible. Such an officer is the representative with the Government of a whole branch of the administration, and as such his allowances should surely be commensurate with the importance and responsibility of his position. But what is the existing state of the case? Our correspondent shows that the Chief Engineer and Secretary to the Government of Bengal, an officer of some thirty years' standing, with distinguished official antecedents, draws a salary of Rs. 2,000 per mensem, while the Secretaries of other Departments, who are not Chief Secretaries, with services ranging from 17 to 21 years, draw salaries of Rs. 2,900 and 3,000. No one can maintain that such an inequality is anything but unfortunate, and a re-adjustment of these allowances seems urgently called for, all the more because it would show that the Covenanted Civilians, who have the distribution of the official loaves and fishes, are not blind to all interests that lie outside the pale of their own service.

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes:—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole proprietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

THE
AND

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 9th July; from Allahabad and Madras to the 7th July; and from Calcutta to the 7th July.

THE Government of India are now engaged in considering the details of the measures necessary for enlarging the Legislative Councils, as foreshadowed in the Viceroy's speech on the Budget.

AT the meeting of the Legislative Council on July 3 the Hon. Mr. Crosthwaite introduced the Bill amending the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1883. This measure is a corollary of the Bill amending the Land Revenue Act introduced the previous week. The Hon. Sir David Barbour brought forward short Bills amending Acts VI. and VII. of 1884 relating to steamships and inland steam vessels.

THE Secretary of State's despatch on the Excise question is being circulated to the Local Governments, which will duly report as to the results of their abkari administration.

THE committee which has been sitting at Naini Tal to consider certain administrative changes in the North-West Provinces is expected to finish its work by the middle of the present month.

IN order to meet the paucity of Covenanted Civilians in the various Provinces due to demands made by Upper Burma, two batches of competition-wallahs proceed to India this autumn, the juniors being excused a year's probation.

THE Viceroy's reply to the letter from the Maharaja of Kashmir has been despatched from Simla. It is a refusal to reconsider the orders passed, though couched in the most courteous and friendly language.

THE Lieut.-Governor of Bengal left Darjeeling on July 4th, reaching Calcutta on the day following.

MR. A. MACKENZIE, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, goes home by the steamer of the 23rd inst., Mr. R. Crosthwaite returning from Simla to officiate during the two and a-half months of his absence.

MR. W. YOUNG, C.S., Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, has applied for four months' leave to Europe on medical certificate.

MR. J. R. REID, who has had a long and trying illness, is now considered convalescent, and will probably start home next month. Colonel Erskine, having succeeded to the Kumaon Commissionership, will consequently forego the three months' leave that he was to have taken.

MR. TUPPER, Chief Secretary to the Punjab Government, goes on two months' leave shortly, Mr. Fanshawe officiating in his place.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST, with an escort of one hundred Native cavalry, has left Quetta for the Zhob country to settle some tribal disputes in that quarter.

COLONEL P. H. HARRIS, Deputy Adjutant-General, acts as Adjutant-General during General Elles' absence on leave.

COLONEL SZCZEPANSKI, Senior Deputy Commissioner, officiates as Commissioner of the Berars, on Mr. Plowden going upon short leave to England this month.

MR. THOMAS DUNCAN JAMESON, who had been in the Burma Police since 1865, and who had been officiating as Inspector-General of Police during General Stedman's absence on short leave, died suddenly in Rangoon on the 3rd instant.

THE Government of these Provinces have sanctioned an inquiry into the charges brought against Dr. G. C. Hall, Superintendent of Naini Jail, of ill-treatment towards Captain Hearsey, when a prisoner in his custody. The investigation will take the form of placing an officer on special duty to take the statements of both parties.

MR. COLQUHOUN, Deputy Commissioner of the Ruby Mines, has been suspended by the Government of India. Mr. Browning from Pokoko relieves him.

MR. BUYERS, the Engineer-in-Chief of the Upper Burma Railway system, is now in Simla. This will enable the Government of India to obtain full information regarding the projected Sagain-Mogoung line.

ADVANTAGE has been taken of General White's presence in Simla to arrange for plans for opening out the Lushai country next cold weather. As operations must commence in November, the shipment of stores and the business of forwarding them to the advanced depôts will begin in September.

A FAREWELL DURBAR was held in Srinagar on June 23 in honour of Captain Durand and his party, who left the next day for Gilgit and Chitral. They are travelling by the Skardo route.

THE Amir has sent for his son Habibulla to Mazar to make him acquainted with the details of administration in Afghan-Turkistan, with a view to entrusting him with the government of that province.

A REBELLION against the Amir's authority has broken out in Badakshan. Some of the Mirs of that province, who were expelled a few years ago, have returned, and have been joined by a number of the inhabitants; and in several places the Amir's officers are being imprisoned and their power broken down. Abdur Rahman has ordered regular troops to march at once from Mazar into Badakshan, while further reinforcements will be drawn from Kabul.

THE Jam of Lus Beyla is recovering from the wounds inflicted on him last April by Habibulla, an Afghan who had been dismissed from his service. The Jam will take the advice of the British authorities as to the manner of dealing with the would-be murderer.

THERE is a good chance of the alternative route from Jamrud to Landi Kotal through the Mullagori country being opened out this cold weather, the plans and estimates for the road being now in course of preparation at Simla by Captain Macdonald, R.E.

THE Bombay Clothing Department will be abolished in the autumn.

THE Assam-Behar Railway was opened for traffic on the 1st inst.

SIR EDWARD BUCK is going to Burma to prepare a plan for the settlement and survey of Upper Burma.

THE fortified serai at Lundi Kotal is practically completed.

THE Secretary of State has approved of the proposal of the Government of India for utilising a portion of the Cashmere troops when reorganised in garrisoning Gilgit.

CAPTAIN YOUNGHUSBAND, King's Dragoon Guards, is about to proceed to Leh, whence he will examine the northern passes of Cashmere.

WORK has been suspended on the petroleum borings in the Rawulpindi district till the cold weather, when another site will be tried. So far the operations have not been attended with much success.

Digitized by Google

HEAVY rain has fallen at Quetta and in the Bolan, and a considerable portion of the Bolan Railway is reported to have been washed away by the floods. Landslips have also occurred on the Hurnai line.

NEW rules regarding appointments in the Judge Advocate-General's Department have just been published.

THE main line of the North-Western Railway is in great danger, owing to the floods on the Indus.

THE season of landslips on the Darjeeling-Himalayan Railway has set in with unusual severity, rendering travelling very dangerous.

PROPOSALS have been laid before Government for the establishment of a Mercantile and Trade Museum in Bombay.

So far as Government is concerned, India will not be represented at the New Zealand Exhibition.

A NEW Home for Soldiers and Sailors has been opened in Bombay.

THE Gaekwar's new Palace at Baroda, which has occupied eight years in building, is now nearly completed.

CAREFUL inquiry into the reported distress at Diamond Harbour has failed to detect a single case of starvation or emaciation from want of food. Relief works are now deserted. The rainfall has been sufficient, and the people are working in the fields.

NOTES.

THERE is little news from India either by mail or wire. Reuter reports that the Indian Government is considering a scheme for raising a large loan in England to enable the construction of railways to be carried on at an increased rate. If this be so it will be carrying out the policy approved of by Lord Lansdowne in one of the earliest speeches he made on his arrival in India. He then said:—"I feel that at the present time all proposals involving an increase of the public expenditure require the closest examination and scrutiny. There is, nevertheless, I am convinced, no duty more incumbent upon the Government than that of extending the railway communication of the country, and of bringing to light and rendering available for human use the wealth which is latent within it."

THIS is the policy which Lieut.-Colonel Marryat, Secretary of the Bengal and North Western Railway Company, and General Trevor, Chairman of the Bombay and Baroda Railway, have for some time been advocating here. The former in a paper lately read by him before the Manchester Chamber of Commerce pointed out that it was manifestly impossible for private enterprise pure and simple to undertake any considerable extension of railways in India, and that Government must help if any progress is to be made.

ALL who know India and her real wants will endorse Colonel Marryat's opinion that if Government will neither make the railways nor aid private enterprise to do so things must come to a deadlock in India. He truly said:—"The proposition that either India or England will sit down contented with 15,000 miles of railway, many of which have been constructed for purely military or famine purposes, for a country like India with a population of 250,000,000, appears to be too absurd. If the number of miles were doubled Government might possibly hold their hand, and I am sure it only requires the united efforts of those interested in the trade of this country, and of our great dependency, to show the Indian Government that it is impossible for them to take up such a position, and how hopelessly India must be thrown out of the race in the keen struggle for trade with our great competitor, America, if such a deadlock is permitted to continue."

THE Government of India's proposals for the unification of the three Presidency armies have been approved generally by the Secretary of State. The transfer of the control of the Madras and Bombay armies to the Supreme Government is deferred, as it will require to be enforced by an Act of Parliament. Meanwhile, certain minor recommendations will be carried into effect. The Commissariat, Transport, and Clothing Departments will be subjected to the direct control of the Government of India.

THE military scheme for the employment of troops of the Feudatory States is being gradually developed. It is believed that Hyderabad will furnish 5,000 men, while Gwalior offers to equip and maintain 2,000, and Jeypore will contribute 1,000 transport animals equipped for service. The whole of the auxiliary force will be highly disciplined, and will act as a reserve, which, if necessary, can be largely and speedily increased.

THE Pioneer comments on the breakdown of the Staff Corps system in the Madras army. There are only five majors on regimental duty in the whole Madras army. In one regiment the colonel's first commission is dated 1859, whilst his next subordinate has only five years' service. In the 17th the senior officer next to the colonel has six years' service. In 20 per cent. of the regiments there is only one wing commander.

AFFAIRS at Sikkim appear to be as far off a satisfactory settlement as ever. Mr. Hart has returned to Darjeeling, and the Tibetans will continue their arrogance and hostility until they receive a severe lesson at the hands of the troops which we may have to send against them shortly.

BESIDES the Lushai expedition next winter, which expedition will include the march of a column from the Chin hills, auxiliary forces being despatched from Cachar and Chittagong, we may have on our hands another little frontier war. It is reported that the Orokzais have been giving considerable trouble lately by raiding into British territory along the Kohat frontier. As the tribe musters some 20,000 fighting men, it will require a strong force from our side to bring them to reason and better manners.

THE Rangoon Gazette states that rubies are known to exist in many localities in Upper Burma outside the tract leased to the Burma Ruby Mines Company. It urges that all future concessions of mining rights should be offered for public competition, and says that a substantial increase of the revenue may be anticipated.

THE Rangoon Times announces that Sir C. Crosthwaite will go on leave at the close of next month, and that he will be replaced by Mr. A. P. MacDonnell, C.S.I., Home Secretary to the Government of India.

THE Scottish preacher who considerately began his prayer with the words "paradoxical as it may seem to Thee, O Lord!—" has an unexpected rival in the shape of one of the High Court Judges at Calcutta. The other day Mr. Justice Norris had to sentence a sailor to be hanged for the murder of a boy, and in concluding his exordium to the unhappy man said, with truly Caledonian caution:—"I beseech you to make use of the short time that remains to you on the earth in seeking forgiveness at the hands of Him who only, as far as I know, can give forgiveness for the wrong that you have done." That, "as far as I know," is delicious. Was it a Judge, too, or merely a layman, who prayed, "Oh, God, if there be a God, save my soul, if I have a soul"?

THE latest official report from Madras states that the cholera visitation is severely felt in the three northern divisions. Of the villagers 35,000 receive relief, and 12,000 labourers are employed on the works. Prices are rising in eleven and falling in eight districts. The reports from Tirhoot are more favourable. The attendance at the relief works in Mozufferpore has decreased to 19,114, and in Durbhunga from 14,656 to 6,270.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JULY 21.

The latest telegraphic despatches from Madras state that the distress in Ganjam continues acute. The relief operations, however, are at present effective. A copious rainfall is reported; but this will bring no increased food supply till October. Special cause for anxiety lies in the almost complete depletion of the stocks of food-grain and in the increasing difficulty of replenishing the stocks. The Government has decided not to interfere with private trade. One hundred relief kitchens have been opened, at which cooked rice is distributed, and 40,000 persons have been relieved in this way and by money; 20,000 more, able to work, being employed on the Gopalpore canal works. It is suggested that to guard against future famines Ganjam should be connected with the rich grain tracts of the Central Provinces. In addition to the proposed east coast railway, linking Bezvada with Cuttack, surveys have been made for lines from Rajpore, on the Bengal-Nagpore railway, to Vizagapatam, and from Pauchpara to Cuttack.

There have been further floods of a serious character in Scinde and on the North-West Frontier generally. The Hurnai branch of the Scinde-Pishin railway was breached. Considerable damage was done to the embankments, and several girders and bridges were carried away. The flood extended over 100 square miles. Kambar is surrounded, and energetic measures have been taken to provide channels for the water. The Sutlej at Ferozepore is in flood, and the railway authorities are engaged in protecting the embankment near the bridge.

The Council of State in Cashmere has adopted a liberal policy in order to attract immigration. It is proposed to grant rights of cultivation to bonâ fide settlers over plots not exceeding 1,000 acres. Only natives of India are at present entitled to the privilege, and preference is to be given to the agricultural classes. The assessment will be low for a series of years. It is estimated that two-thirds of the cultivable land is lying waste owing to the unfavourable revenue laws in force. Arrangements have been made for paying the Cashmere troops their back pay and insuring regularity of payment in the future. It is proposed to connect Gilpi with Srinagar by a military road.

A large meeting of influential natives was recently held at Ludhiana, in the Punjab, with the object of adopting measures for a reduction of the ruinous marriage and funeral expenses among the Jats, and resolutions favourable to reform were passed.

Large meetings have been held in the south to protest against cow-killing in India.

A horrible case of cruelty to a child-wife was recently tried near Calcutta. The wife, a child five years old, was suspended from the roof by her hair by her husband's mother and father and then thrashed with a stick and branded with hot irons. The Native magistrate, in sentencing the accused, said that throughout a long career he had never met with a case of such persistent and fiendish cruelty.

The reorganisation of the infantry of the Punjab States intended to share in the defence of the North-West Frontier is being actively carried out. Drill instructors from the Native army have been posted in each State. Patiala contributes 1,000 men, and Jhind, Nabha, and Kapurthala 600 each. The men will be armed with the Snider. The reorganisation of the cavalry in the Rajpootana States will shortly be commenced. A British officer from the 11th Bengal Cavalry has been appointed inspecting officer of the cavalry regiments in Jodhpore, Bhurtpore, and Ulwar.

The epidemic of strikes has extended to the lamplighters in Bombay. They complain of being irregularly and insufficiently paid by the municipality.

A leper butcher has been arrested in Bombay.

The official memorandum on the wheat harvest in 1888-89 states that the outturn in the Punjab increased 6½ and that in Scinde 9 per cent.; but there was a falling off in Bombay and the Central and North-West Provinces of 23 per cent. The yield in the Punjab was 358,000 tons in excess of last year's. The ruling prices were low, but it is not believed that the gross export from India will exceed that of last year.

The papers connected with the Crawford case laid before Parliament have created a very profound sensation, and form the general topic of comment in the Press. A monster meeting of the Parsees will be held shortly, to protest against the imputations which have been officially recorded and published against their community. Meanwhile, the Bombay Government, through its own folly, is placed in an unfavourable position. Lord Reay has exceeded his constitutional powers by maintaining corrupt native officials in office, notwithstanding the fact that these men have been judicially declared ineligible for office. It is impossible that judicial or other official functions can be discharged by these men in face of the recorded judgment of the High Court that they are legally incapacitated to hold office. All their orders and decisions would be questioned, disputed, and appealed against, whilst the usurpation of jurisdiction would subject these men to heavy penal damages, unless they were indemnified by an Act of the Imperial Parliament. They must go; otherwise we shall have a serious deadlock between the judiciary and the Executive. It seems hardly probable, however, that Parliament will consent to pass a special Act for the purpose of maintaining in office a class of men confessedly venal and corrupt.

The Bombay Times, commenting on the curiously zealous injustice of the Bombay Government in endeavouring to condemn Mr. Crawford by ex parte statements after his acquittal by a strong and impartial Court of commission, concludes with the following statement:—

"Though agreeing that the indemnity to the corrupt Mamlutdars ought never to have been given, still it is, we think, the general opinion of all in Bombay, friends and critics, officials as well as non-officials, that rather than become the instrument of breaking the indemnities granted by himself Lord Reay ought to have tendered his resignation."

The Pioneer, criticising the partisan character and zeal of prosecution exhibited by Mr. Ommanney's note, thus winds up its remarks:—

"But what can be said of a Government or a philo-Indian Governor who would blacken the name of a whole community to serve his own ungenerous purpose?"

BURMA.

RANGOON, JULY 20.

The publicity recently given given to the harsh and unjustifiable manner in which the "consolidation" of villages is being carried out in Upper Burma, and to the frequent abuse of the powers conferred on Deputy-Commissioners by the wholesale deportation to Kubo Valley, the most unhealthy district of the upper province, of villagers who are relatives of dacoits, merely on suspicion, has produced good results. The local Government has issued a circular directing the district officers not to remove villagers beyond the limits of the division and forbidding further deportation to the Kubo Valley or Upper Chindwin. Another circular has also been issued urging the district officers to be careful not to exceed their legal powers in "consolidating" villages. The baneful results of the system of "consolidation," and especially of the manner in which it has been enforced, can scarcely be exaggerated. In many cases where villagers were forcibly removed from their old habitations to larger villages they had practically no choice but to become dacoits. All the arable land in the locality to which they were removed was already occupied, and they could find no means of support.

Another grave scandal connected with the administration of justice in Upper Burma has been recently checked. Instructions have been given that hencefoward no judicial officer is to try dacoits who have been pursued by him.

The disturbances in Katha have spread, and a large dacoit gathering is reported in the territory of the Wuntho Tsawbwa, who, however, does not appear to be implicated. The dacoits have assembled in such strength in Wuntho that the Bombay and Burma Corporation has removed its elephants from a portion of the district and suspended forest work. The Kanlain Kachyens are again troublesome, and a body of the Goorkha military police has been sent to Sikan to check them. The Yaw district is troubled by dacoits under Boh-Singwar.

The Mandalay Herald states that the troops at Bhamo are suffering severely from fever, 17 per cent. of the Hampshire Regiment and 25 per cent. of the 17th Bengal Infantry being in hospital.

The Chief Commissioner arrived in Mandalay yesterday. General Gordon, commanding the troops in Burma, leaves Rangoon to-day to join Sir C. Crosthwaite and discuss possible military operations to be conducted during the cold weather. These operations will probably include the advance of a column from Burma, by the Myitha Valley, to attack the Haken and Hasson tribes, and to meet a column sent from India. The Kaulon and Siyin Chin tribes will be attacked from Fort White.

Applications are being made to the local Government for a concession to prospect or mine for rubies in various districts of Upper Burma. It is reported that indications of rubies have been found in many localities, including the immediate vicinity of Mandalay.

The Mandalay Herald of July 16th publishes a list of 12 districts in Upper and Lower Burma wherein cattle disease prevails.

Intelligence received from eastern Karennee states that the Siamese have taken possession of all Sawlabaw's former territory east of the Salween. This portion of Karennee has for years produced the best teak timber coming to Moulmein, and last year 35,000 logs were extracted there. This year the export will probably be suspended altogether, as the Siamese demand a heavy royalty on timber. They have confiscated a large quantity of trees already felled, belonging to Moulmein foresters, who have appealed to the Chief Commissioners. The export of timber next year from Moulmein will probably be reduced one-half owing to the action of the Siamese.

JULY 21.

It is reported from Minbu that the dacoit chief Ottama has been captured by a Burman Myoke. He was Bohshway's chief lieutenant, and, on his death, succeeded him. Ottama has harassed a large district on the west of the Irrawaddy for nearly three years. Recently, owing to the constant pursuit, he has been a fugitive, and has been abandoned by his followers.

THE INDIAN NATIVE PRINCES AND IMPERIAL DEFENCE.

SIMLA, JULY 23.

Under the scheme of Imperial defence it is estimated that the native States will furnish altogether 30,000 troops, mostly cavalry.

The Maharajah of Gwalior offers to equip 2,000 men for Imperial service, and the Maharajah of Jeypore has intimated his readiness to furnish 1,000 transport animals.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

SIMLA, JULY 20.

According to official returns published to-day the earnings of the Indian State railways for the quarter ending June 30th last were 16 lakhs in excess of those during the corresponding period of 1888. The Burma Railway earned a total of 12 lakhs and the Bengal-Nagpore Railway a total of six lakhs.

AFGHAN TURKESTAN.

SIMLA, JULY 20.

Dr. Griesbach, an official of the Geological Survey Department, who has lately been in Afghan Turkestan, is expected to arrive at Peshawur on Tuesday next.

GANJAM.

We have received from the India Office the following copy of a telegram from the Governor of Madras, dated July 23rd, 1889:—

"Condition of Ganjam for the week ending July 20th. Season continues favourable; rainfall during week heavy and general; average fall at 19 stations 3·67 inches. Prices stationary. Returns of numbers of persons employed on relief works incomplete, but numbers believed to be stationary. Numbers on gratuitous relief rapidly increasing, owing to more thorough village inspection; total 58,465, of whom 8,215 men, 14,597 women, 35,653 children. Forty-eight relief circles constituted, and 45 kitchens established.

"Imports of grain by sea 89 tons, by land 292 tons. Deaths from cholera 741."

THE RUSSIAN EXPEDITION TO TIBET.—The latest advices from Central Asia show that the Russian expedition to Tibet under Colonel Pevtsoff has entered Kashgaria. The health of the expedition is reported to be excellent, and it is hastening towards the oasis of Niam, at the foot of the Tibetan range, where it will establish its base and head-quarters.

TURKESTAN.—The Turkestan Gazette publishes an official account of a tour recently made by the Governor-General through that province. The condition of the country is pronounced to be generally satisfactory, even from an economical point of view, but the decay of the silk industry is deplored, and various remedies are suggested for its revival. The decline in the industry is traced to the disease among the silkworms, which has reduced the produce of silk to one-fourth what it was four years ago. An extreme case is given of what happened on the market of Khodjent, where in 1885 30,000 poods of cocoons were sold for 300,000 roubles, while last year only 4,000 poods were disposed of for 50,000 roubles. Among the remedies tried has been the importation of Milanese and Japanese grains, but a certain degree of success has only been attained in the case of the latter. Undiscouraged, however, fresh efforts are to be made this year with healthy grains from Corsica and Bokhara.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE REVENUE OF UPPER BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

Among the more encouraging features of the Indian Budget of the current official year is the elasticity displayed by the resources of Upper Burma. It is now seen, much earlier than was ever expected, what a rich inheritance we have succeeded to in the annexation of the upper province. The revenue of the country seems to be advancing by leaps and bounds, and that too in the course of three or four years. In the Budget of 1888-9 that Revenue was put down at Rx. 547,000: in the budget of 1889-90 it is stated at Rx. 870,200. But to get a good idea of the progress of revenue in this section of the province it would be as well to go back a little and note what it has been from year to year since the annexation. Thus we find that from 1886-87 the advance has been as follows:—

1886-87	...	...	...	...	Rx.222,498
1888-89	...	...	...	...	547,000
1889-90	...	...	...	...	870,200

Nor is it too much to say that the hopes entertained, by not a few, of Upper Burma realising as much revenue as the lower and older section will, in all probability, be attained in the near future—not many years hence. This shows not only what the country is capable of but how greatly it was neglected in the past. Such a revenue as we are realizing never was obtained by the King's treasury when Upper Burma was ruled over by a native monarch. The trading transactions of the Court, the monopolies, royalties, and taxes on commerce claimed by the King, and the rapacity of ministers served to hamper trade and agriculture and alienated large sums, which if they had been laid out for the good of the public would in the end have served to make native Burma contented, happy and prosperous. But the public good was little thought of by King and Court, and so the people remained poor, abject and discontented. In the beginning of our rule they did not understand us, and besides the country was unsettled. Now as they get to see they are no more to be objects of the rapacity of officials; as agriculturists and traders get to find out that all they have to pay are a few taxes to be let alone in peace and security, they will settle down to regular industry; and while the public revenues keep growing and increasing individual prosperity and contentment will likewise advance. The more of settled and lawful government the people have the more will they advance on the paths of moral and material progress. The country is immensely rich in natural resources, the exploitation of which will not only bestow fortunes on speculative capitalists, but confer blessings untold on the people while it will afford the local administration ample means for not only necessary uses, but for opening out places more and more every year. What is wanted now is a strong, wise, capable administration, and if the Imperial Government were wise it would without delay attend to this matter, for the revenue would then be four times what it now is.

CULTIVATION IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Times.)

If planters in Burma are to hire labour locally and pay coolies Rs. 12 per mensem wages, there is not much prospect of any cultivation paying. Our contemporary the Gazette thinks that fruit cultivation is the most paying in Burma. But no cultivation, we believe, would stand such high prices for coolies as now prevail. Coolies, however, with good land laws, would very soon be imported from India, whereas under the present system of leases, which the Revenue officer has the power of cancelling, capitalists are not attracted to the land which remains largely waste whilst labourers starve in India, earning three or four rupees per mensem only. Fruit cultivation in Europe and America pays handsomely, but then there is an export trade in the fruits produced, or a preserving trade which helps growers to dispose of the surplus stock for which there is no local demand. If we had such a way of getting rid of our surplus stocks in Burma fruit cultivation would pay very much better than it does. A few weeks ago, when mangoes first ripened, they were selling at three and four rupees per hundred. As larger stocks poured into the town by cart, boat, train, and steamer, the price fell to eight annas per hundred. Now if these fruits were largely pickled or preserved in Rangoon those having them for sale might rely on a more steady market, and not have a stock worth 300 rupees one day fall to fifty rupees the next. It is in producing grain for export, and not to supply a local demand, that agriculture in Burma pays. It would be the same with fruit-growing or any other cultivation. But, given security of tenure of the land, we believe the labour difficulty in Burma would soon right itself. Our first object should be to attract the capitalists to the country, and this we should never be able to do so long as we seek to put them and their capital at the disposal of Revenue officers. We have failed for some five or six years to attract planters to Tavoy, and shall continue to fail to attract them to Upper Burma until we reform our land laws, and give them absolutely secure and indefeasible titles to the soil where they have expended their capital and energies.

CAMPING, AND CASUAL LEAVE.

Referring to two recent Government rulings on these matters the Pioneer is thoroughly dissatisfied, and thus expresses its discontent:—

We are not aware that in this part of India it has ever been charged against District Officers as a body that they neglect their camping opportunities. The complaint of the public has generally been entirely the other way, namely, that it is impossible to know where the responsible head of affairs is to be found between November and March. But whether there may have been a too-pronounced exception in some isolated case, or whether possibly it has been sought under the guise of policy to excuse the unusual and almost complete abandonment by the head of the Government of his winter headquarters, the ukase has gone forth that every District Officer, whatever the nature of his work, shall spend not less than four months in camp every cold weather. The absurdity of a hard-and-fast rule of this sort is patent, and from the point of view of the public, who have some right to a voice in the matter, it is little short of monstrous. There is no exception. It does not matter whether the district is Benares, with its great city in the centre of a patch of country one can ride to the edge of in any direction before breakfast, or, let us say, Gorakhpur with its five thousand square miles of field and forest. There is no option. The four months must be done.

There could hardly be a better instance of the vexatiousness of an ill-considered generalisation than this. It is, moreover, useless, as serving no end which could not be better attained by ordinary means. It is the simplest thing in the world for Government to ascertain exactly how long any particular officer has been in camp; and to decide whether, having regard to the circumstances of the case, he has or has not paid sufficient attention to this part of his duties.

The other order is that by which what is known as "casual leave" has been practically put an end to. It has been part of the lex non scripta of the Service, since a time that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, that a Collector or a Commissioner could allow an officer temporary leave of absence on good cause shown for a period of four or ten days respectively. Such a concession is natural and almost inevitable under the conditions of Indian service. It is permitted to an officer to depart without further reference into the remotest jungle of his district for weeks at a time, and there to kill and slay if his tastes lie in that direction. But to run in thirty or forty miles by train to the next station to dine with a friend, or to commit the enormity of a rubber of whist, is absolutely forbidden during the cold weather, and possible only with a report to Government for the rest of the year. Of course men are to be found who will abuse any privilege, and the privilege of casual leave has been no exception. But the instances are well known and few in number, and could easily have been dealt with without putting a whole Service under the harrow, and making yet another and a gratuitous addition to the many petty discomforts and privations of Indian existence. Both these orders again connote the persistent degradation of official functions which has been going on of late years. There was a time when a Government trusted its officers with authority and looked to them for results; when it laid down the ends to be attained and left, within certain limits, the means to be adapted to particular circumstances and local necessities. It now prescribes the means down to the hours of office and to the uttermost nukshia.

THE ADVENTURE WITH A LEOPARD.

"Veracity" writes to the Englishman:—You will allow me to correct a most garbled version of an adventure with a leopard at Dehri-on-the-Sone which appeared in your issue of the 13th inst. It is not difficult to trace the source from which the correspondent from Gya got his version of the affair; but it is most unaccountable, unless the story narrated comes at second-hand, how the incidents could have been so incorrectly related. The young man of whom it is asserted that he had been bitten badly in his hand had one of his knees clawed, his hands escaped mauling. Then the account of the chowkidar having rescued the "young man" is most fanciful, for, as a matter of fact, the leopard had made his charge on the "young man" and had been repelled by him, singly, when she bounded away to a deep drain, followed closely by him. It was subsequent to this, and while a shot was being taken at her, that a chowkidar from the crowd which had collected at the back of the "young man" most daringly ran forward towards the leopard. The shot fired took no effect, and by this time the chowkidar was up to the beast and made a stroke at her with his battle axe. But the animal being in a drain having embankments, it was seen that the end of the axe fell short. In a second the leopard sprang out of the drain and made for the plucky chowkidar, who threw down his weapon and grappled with the beast. The "young man" was up to the pair directly, and in a moment despatched the beast, placing the muzzle of his gun to her side. That the leopard was despatched stone dead was apparent to all, as she immediately relaxed her grip on the chowkidar and rolled over. This does not look as though the chowkidar rescued the "young man." The experienced shikari, who was accompanied by his inseparable self, was all this time keeping at a respectful distance, and with whom it was a physical impossibility to take in what had transpired came up a day after the affair so to speak, and after giving expression to a doubt in his mind as to the animal being quite dead, like the bold (?) "experienced" shikari wasted a bullet on the beast. The skin is in preservation, and on which is not to be found the mark of a cut such as a battle-axe would have left, had the animal been "brained" by the chowkidar. There never appeared so many inaccuracies in a paragraph as are crowded in a small one re "an adventure with a leopard" in your issue of the 13th inst. I trust, in fairness to the parties, that this letter will be given a space in the columns of your paper.

BENGAL.

(July 7.)

THE accounts from the tea districts in Assam and Cachar still continue unfavourable, but there has been some improvement in Sylhet. Chittagong has had a good fall of rain, which was badly wanted, but in the Dooars they have had rather too much, as upwards of twenty inches were registered last week.

THE Rungpore correspondent of the Jessore Sammilani says that a postal peon, named Surup Dass, has recently sent a money-order for Rs. 10 to Her Majesty the Queen as a mark of his recognition of the gratitude he feels for his Sovereign for the comparative ease with which he maintains himself and his family as a postal servant under Her Majesty's Government.

THE Calcutta Central Committee of the Uncovenanted Civil Service Association held a meeting on June 29, when the following resolutions were passed:—1. That having regard to the result of the votes in the debate on the motion of Sir Roper Lethbridge in the House of Commons on May 31 the Committee are unanimously of opinion that the agitation should be resolutely continued with a view to attaining ultimate redress for the grievances complained of, in the event of the scheme stated by Sir J. Gorst to be under the consideration of the Government proving to be ineffectual. 2. That the most cordial thanks of the Association be conveyed through the London Committee to Sir Roper Lethbridge, Mr. H. S. King, and the other Members of Parliament who have so generously supported their cause. 3. That active measures be adopted to secure continued co-operation in all departments, and to collect subscriptions for providing the funds of which the London Committee are in need.

A WRITER is describing in a Calcutta paper his experiences in the by-paths of crime in that city. Amongst other things he saw was a heavy lead bullet, some three-quarters of an inch in diameter. Of this he says:—"This ball, it was explained to me, had been found on the person of a purana chor, or habitual thief, and was being used to form a pouch or bag in the throat for secreting money, jewels, &c., in the event of his person being searched. Such a ball, it would appear, is put into the mouth, and is allowed to slide down gently until it reaches some part near the epiglottis, where it is held in position and kept there for, say, half-an-hour at a time. This operation is repeated many times daily, and gradually a sort of pocket is formed, the period of formation being longer or shorter according to the size of the pouch required. In some cases six months have sufficed, in others one year has been necessary, while in a few instances two years have been devoted to forming the recess. Such a pouch as the last is capable of holding ten rupees! The thief, therefore, can calmly undergo the process of searching, and when nothing is found on his person he walks off with the spoil secreted in his throat, all the while the power of breathing and speech being in no way disturbed."

A CALCUTTA paper reports:—Before the Deputy Magistrate of Alipore on Saturday a moodey and his wife, residing in Bhowanipore, were charged with grossly torturing their daughter-in-law, a girl aged only six years. It was alleged that the girl and her elder sister, aged about 13 years, were recently married to the defendants' two sons, who are also of tender years. Subsequently the girls found their new home very uncomfortable, owing to ill-treatment and insufficiency of food. The younger girl got out of her bed one night, went to the kitchen to satisfy her hunger, and the defendants caught her in the act of eating some rice. The following day she was bound hand and foot and suspended to the roof by her hair. After she had been severely beaten with a branch of a tree she was branded with a red hot iron on both her cheeks and on various portions of her body. In the midst of her screams she asked for a drink of water, when she was suspended with her face downwards, and a bowl of water placed on the ground out of her reach. The police arriving at the house took the defendants into custody and removed the unfortunate girl into hospital, where she now lies in a precarious condition. The magistrate adjourned the case for the medical evidence, the defendants being enlarged on bail in the sum of Rs. 100 each.

A LOCAL paper gives the description of the execution of the sailor Grogan at Calcutta on Tuesday. It seems that in the interval between the sentence and the hanging Grogan told one or two different versions of the fatality, but latterly he freely admitted his guilt, saying that the fatal stab was given unthinkingly in a moment of rage:—An unwonted appearance was presented by the Presidency Jail in the early grey of yesterday morning. Inside and outside warders kept watch and ward, with rifles and fixed bayonets. All the prisoners were confined to their sleeping quarters till the execution was over. A small crowd were gathered round the doorway, and were allowed gradually to filter within the walls by groups of twelve to twenty. When the hour of six, that fixed for the execution, approached, there were about 150 spectators gathered round the gallows, the greater portion of them native, with a sprinkling of Europeans and Eurasians. Just at this time rain came down in torrents, and continued to fall heavily during the subsequent proceedings. Promptly at six o'clock the prisoner and his guards emerged from the inner compound. He was pinioned, his arms being corded behind him both at the wrists and above the elbows. He walked perfectly erect, and though Father Bruhl, who had given him the last priestly consolations, the condemned man being a Roman Catholic, grasped his arm, it was more with the object of giving moral than physical support. The Father also performed the thoughtful act of sharing his umbrella with the prisoner, and protecting him from the drenching rain. A little group of police and prison officials followed. Grogan walked straight up to the scaffold, with an expressionless face, and lips not uttering a word. He ascended the score or so of steps without stumbling or faltering, and took his stand under the beam, Father Bruhl engaging, inaudibly to those below and around, in prayer right up to the last moment. The rope was then adjusted, and the white cap drawn over the wretched man's face. All those on the platform stood aside, leaving the prisoner alone and unsupported in the centre—the bolt was drawn—and all was over in an instant. The rope showed no signs of vibration after the prisoner had disappeared from view, and only a slight thud was heard by those around. Death, according to Mr. Sevenoaks, the acting Jail Superintendent, was instantaneous, the drop having been the full one of five feet six inches; these figures exactly coinciding with Grogan's weight. The body was allowed to hang for the customary period, and at the inquest which followed the usual formal verdict was returned.

MADRAS.

ACCORDING to the Madras Mail Captain Dorsey, Deputy Commissary and Overseer, Madras Gun-Carriage Factory, and Store Sergeant Hogg are being tried for criminal breach of trust in respect of various small sums of money aggregating Rs. 119-12-6.

THE question of whether a barrister can sue for the recovery of his fees has cropped up in the Small Cause Court at Madras, where a barrister has brought an action against a Native to recover Rs. 750 as fees. The case has been adjourned to Aug. 13, when it is to be argued by counsel.

THE tigers and cheetas in South Canara appear to have had a good feed during the quarter ending March 31. The return sent up to Government of the cattle destroyed in this period shows that no fewer than 349 bullocks, 292 cows, 89 cows, 98 buffaloes, 3 sheep, 6 goats, 4 dogs, and 5 pigs were killed in South Canara alone. In Malabar the feed was not nearly so abundant. The cattle killed were 125 bullocks, 167 cows, 21 calves, 34 goats, and 1 pony.

BOMBAY.

(July 9.)

THE following appears in the Times of India of the 1st:—"We have the pleasure to announce that Curwen, Kane and Co. are the new proprietors of the Times of India."

THE Gaekwar has accorded his sanction to the construction of a railway line from Vishwantri to Petlad, a distance of twenty-one miles. The line will be narrow gauge.

MR. JUSTICE SCOTT, of the Bombay High Court, has just sentenced a Native to five years' rigorous imprisonment for cutting off a woman's nose. His lordship remarked that the practice of mutilating women in this manner had become too common in Bombay.

A BOMBAY paper says:—"Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught, accompanied by Mrs. Cavaye, visited the Rani of Akalkote in Poona on Saturday. Arrangements on a grand scale were made for the reception of her Royal Highness at the Rani's residence, the interior of which looked gorgeous with rich velvet carpets, satin-covered sofas and large mirrors. The Duchess, on arrival, was met by the Chief of Akalkote, who conducted her Royal Highness and Mrs. Cavaye upstairs into the Durbar-room. Here they were left with the Rani, who conversed with them half an hour in English. After being presented with the usual Oriental peace-offerings the Duchess and Mrs. Cavaye took their departure."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

ARRANGEMENTS are now being matured for the distribution of the five thousand transport mules provided for in the last Budget in connection with the mobilisation scheme.

A SUFFICIENT number of the new breech-loading field guns will be sent out this year to completely equip the batteries in the second army corps. It has been decided that the waggons are to be of steel, the same pattern being adopted as in England.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICEROY has been pleased to honour his country regiment by the presentation of a silver and a bronze modal annually to be competed for by the non-commissioned officers and men of the 2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment.

THE immediate issue of 1,000 Snider rifles and 300 carbines to the reorganised troops in the Ulwar State has been sanctioned in connection with the Melliss mission. During the next cold weather the Jodhpur cavalry will be organised and the Jeypur transport corps formed.

IN connection with the re-organisation of the Military Accounts Department and the formation of a new Circle with headquarters at Rawalpindi, plans are now prepared for head-quarter offices at that station to accommodate the Controller and his staff. Captain Field, Assistant Accountant-General, has been deputed from Simla to Pindi on special duty in connection therewith.

As stated some time ago, it was through the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay that the case of Colonel Bulkeley came under reconsideration. The Commander-in-Chief in India when consulted replied that he could not advocate a free pardon, but would not offer any objection to a remission of three months if the authorities saw fit. The Bombay Government accordingly addressed the Secretary of State, whereupon the remission of sentence was granted. It takes effect from the 8th August.

THE Indian Telegraph Department have adopted a new message form for universal use on field service. Clearness in the matter of direction and simplicity as regards technical details have been aimed at, with a view to facilitating the work of the soldier-signaller, who naturally has not the experience of the ordinary operator trained in a civil telegraph office. Each sheet is ruled to contain sixty-four words, so that it can be used for long messages whether sent by Staff Officers or by newspaper correspondents. The ordinary telegraph form was found to give rise to confusion and delay when used in field offices, where the clerical staff is always small.

THE fortified serai at Landi Kotal is now practically completed. It boasts a mess-house, five quarters for officers, and barrack accommodation for a limited number of men. There is water laid on to the quarters and barracks, and a covered tank has been furnished capable of holding a reserve of 60,000 gallons. This does not, however, quite solve the water-supply question in relation to the possible location of 1,500 or 2,000 troops and followers, with transport animals, in case of war. It is believed, however, that water could be conveyed in pipes to a spot within three-quarters of a mile of the serai, sufficient to meet all possible requirements.

MAJOR CATHER, commanding the Royal Engineers in Burma, has died at Mandalay.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

GREIFENSTEIN.*

Few writers of the present time display more power of thought than Mr. Crawford; at every turn the actions of every-day life are examined with merciless severity. Not a word, not a deed but is criticised with a closeness which allows nothing to escape; in fact, his works are to a large extent essays upon the foibles and weaknesses of mankind. "Greifenstein" is no exception to the rule. At every page there are to be found reflections upon the motives which actuate, and sarcasms upon the causes which influence. To the thoughtful reader the trite observations glittering like pearls will ever be welcome and replete with attraction, apart from any inherent charm which the tale may itself possess. In the present instance, however, there is a fair allowance of the "blood and thunder" style of incident, which appeals to the many-headed public far more forcibly than do any fine literary virtues or beauties of language. From this point of view the most "exigeant" purchaser must fain admit that there is no lack of heartrending situations, no want of dramatic incident, no absence of the horrible, which nowadays to a large extent does duty for plot, and, indeed, for all that a romance should contain.

As regards sober-minded critics accustomed to weigh in the balance all ghastly efforts and sickening revelations "Greifenstein" is perilously near the vortex of condemnation in this respect. It is but fair, however, to add that the masterly manner in which Mr. Crawford handles the most repulsive incidents not only stamps him as a novelist of high pretensions, but purifies his tale from horrors too terrible to be detailed and crimes too fearful to be described. If we must needs find fault we should rather be tempted to question whether it is wise to clothe with a robe of semi-righteousness actions which, if not absolutely criminal, are at least on the borderland of wrong. What good can ensue, for instance, from making a brother's love for his brother's wife holy and unalloyed with the taint of impurity. Theoretically such may be the case, but it is playing with edged tools to depict and analyse as harmless and right feelings which to many would be improper and to all would be dangerous. Suicide, too, is not—at least from a Christian point of view—an arguable action. It is murder, albeit self is the victim, and to suppose that one has a right to take away one's own life is a theory at once sinful and demoralising. With these few citicisms we dismisss a book which is clever, well written and of daring audacity as regards plot and development.

CLEOPATRA.†

It is, perhaps, inevitable that an author should possess an individuality and mannerism which, as each successive work appears, are traceable at every page; indeed, were things otherwise, there would be no particular reason why any given writer should retain a hold upon the public imagination, and it is therefore as well that things should be as they are. But of all claimants to literary fame there is, perhaps, not a novelist of the day to whom the remark applies with so much force as to Mr. Rider Haggard, the apostle of the "weird." There is invariably an appeal to the unnatural and, it might also be said, the uncanny; scenes are depicted which make the blood tingle in the veins, not so much by reason of the exciting nature of the situation as owing to the uncanniness of the surroundings. At times, too, the dead are made to add to the miseries of the living, and an involuntary shudder testifies to the success of the writer in harrowing the feelings and rudely wounding the finer susceptibilities of the human heart.

There are not wanting persons who consider the possession of this undoubted power of touching the reader's fancy as one of Mr. Rider Haggard's strongest claims to popularity. We ourselves are of a contrary opinion, and are tempted to hope that it is a matter for congratulation that, as regards "Cleopatra," this peculiarity is reduced to a minimum, and in place of it are scattered reflections upon the deeds of the chief actors in the scene, which serve to place the author upon a much higher pedestal of fame. Judged from this standpoint this latest novel is by far the best of the many from the same hand which have attracted public attention, let not the reader, however, for a moment suppose that the melodramatic horrors, which have in the past laid the foundation of this fortunate author's reputation, are wanting in the work under review; far otherwise, there is a never-ending series of stirring incidents and fearful adventures, so that interest never flags, and young England will rejoice that there is the weird at times just to keep alive the love for the dreadful and unnatural. A word, too, of praise to Mr. Haggard for the very able and irreproachable manner in which he has depicted the loves of the most lovely woman amidst the ancients. From first to last there is nought to offend—scarcely, indeed, is there a suggestion of wrong—and were it not that, by the very nature of things, the weakness and frailties of poor fallen humanity are matters which, as regards the young, it is perhaps well to keep veiled, there is not a line which might not be placed in the hands of the most unsophisticated schoolgirl.

It is of course obvious that, as the life and death of Cleopatra are recorded in the pages of history, the reader knows at once that certain scenes in fiction cannot end otherwise than in a certain direction; were it not so Mr. Haggard would have had to rewrite the annals of the past. This, however, is a small matter, and we are glad, as far as is in our power, to place the imprimatur of approval upon a work which completely dims the glory of "She" and other fictions from the same pen.

THE DIARY OF WILLIAM HEDGES, Esq.*

The British conquest of India commenced in 1757, was completed with the annexation of Oude in 1856, and confirmed by the suppression of the terrible mutiny of the Bengal army in 1857. The century of conquest was preceded by over a century of merely commercial relations, marked at first chiefly by the famous "Separate Voyages" and "Joint Stock Voyages" of the East India Company's ships round the Cape of Good Hope; and from 1661, the date of the cession of Bombay by the Portuguese to the English, by the rapid development of the credit and influence of the factories or trading stations established by us all over India. The factory at Surat was the chief seat of the Company's government in India between 1629 and 1635. Madras (Fort St. George) was founded by Francis Day in 1639-40. Factories were formed at Balasor and Hugli in 1642, and at "Castle-Bazaar" (Kasimbazar) in 1658. The seat of the Western "Presidency" was removed from Surat to Bombay in 1685-7; and it was on the 20th of December, 1686, that the Company's agent, Job Charnock, wearied out by the oppressions of the Mohammedan ruler of Bengal, withdrew from the open factory at Hugli to Chátanati. A year later the Company was forced for a while to retire from all its factories and agencies in "the Bay" (of Bengal) to Madras. But "trusty" Job Charnock had, with the usual insight of the merchant adventurers of the seventeenth century, selected his new settlement on the Hugli river; and there in after years rose the imperial capital of Calcutta, which derives its English name from the native village of Kalikata, included, with the villages of Chátanati and Govindpúr, in the "Chattanuttea" of Job Charnock's letters to his London directors. It was owing to the persecutions suffered at this time from the Moguls in "the Bay" and "the Coast" (of Coromandel) that the Court of Directors determined in 1689 to consolidate their position on the basis of territorial sovereignty in order to acquire the status of an independent power in their dealings with the Moguls. To this end they formed the following resolution:—

"The increase of our revenue is the subject of our care as much as our trade; tis that must maintain our force when twenty accidents may interrupt our trade; tis that must make us a nation in India; without that we are but a great number of interlopers, united by His Majesty's Royal Charter, fit only to trade where nobody of power thinks it in their interest to prevent us; and upon this account it is that the wise Dutch, in all their general advices that we have seen, write ten paragraphs concerning their Government, their civil and military policy, warfare, and the increase of their revenue, for one passage they write concerning trade."

Sir H. Yule, in his extracts from the contemporary records of the Company explanatory of Hedges's "Diary" quotes several passages animated by the same prescient spirit as is here revealed; and he believes them to have been dictated or greatly influenced by Sir Josia Child, the ever faithful patron of "trusty" Job Charnock; and if this opinion be correct—in which the learned editor will have the concurrence of every one familiar with the writings of Sir Josia Child—we must also attribute to the latter the remarkable paragraph above transcribed from the court records of the East India Company. Yet it was not until another half century had passed that the directors, driven to it by the tyranny of the Moguls, the intrigues of the French, and the constant depredations of the Mahrattas, at length deliberately undertook the conquest of India. It is for the light which Sir Henry's second and third volumes throw upon "the factory period" that the present publication is chiefly valuable. The second volume contains notices regarding Sir William Hedges, documentary memoirs of Job Charnock, and other miscellaneous illustrations of the time in India; and the third volume supplies contributions to a biography of Thomas Pitt, Governor of Fort St. George, the honest purchaser, as Sir Henry conclusively demonstrates, of the "Pitt Diamond," the grandfather of Chatham, and great-grandfather of William Pitt, and, through his sons and daughters, the great lar of not fewer than five families in the English peerage. The third volume is also furnished with collections on the early history of the Company's settlements in Bengal and on early charts and topography of the Hugli river. Naturally, therefore, the interest of the reader is concentrated on these two volumes, wherein Sir H. Yule, by the simple magic of painstaking and research, and his instinctive sympathy with his subject, has for the first time given substance and life to the men who, toiling in the obscurity of a forgotten crisis of English history, by their wisdom, promptitude, and courage, and, above all, by their steadfastness in the discharge of their daily duties, laid the foundations of the slowly piled might of the British Indian Empire.

But the first volume, which is entirely taken up with the diary of Sir William Hedges's voyage to India and return journey overland to Europe, is also of great interest; and not only in regard to its contents, but on account also of its history and that of its writer. In the Athenæum of February 22nd, 1873, was published a letter, dated Newmarket, November 28th, 1619, addressed by George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, "To my very loving friends the Governors and Company of the East India Merchants," in which the duke voluntarily restores to the Earl of Warwick the shares held by the latter in the East India Company, that on their forfeiture to the king had been bestowed on the Duke of Buckingham. The duke's seal attached to the paper was described as still perfect; and the history of the document was that, after the sequestration of the Company's imperial estate to the Crown in 1857, the new masters of the "India House" in Leadenhall-street, when about to remove their office to Westminster, made a clean sweep of the old records of the Company. In this way they turned over 300 tons of these records to Messrs. Spicer, the paper makers, to be reduced to pulp. From one of the cartloads on their way to the pulping tanks the Duke of Buckingham's letter was blown off by the wind, and picked up by a passer-by, of whom it was bought in 1873 for £5. The whole of the original records of the Indian Navy are said to have perished in this way; and the circumstances of their destruction show, as was remarked in the Athenæum at the time, that when work of this sort has to be done no one is so competent to do it thoroughly, to let nothing of value escape them, as your literary man; and the India Office has always been strong in literary men. Our readers, therefore, will not be surprised to learn that in Sir H. Yule's opinion it is possible that Sir William Hedges's diary "formed one of the papers which were carted away to be destroyed under a certain order issued by the Secretary of State in Council." Sir H. Yule suggests also that the quaint and curious diary of Richard Cocks, of the English factory in Japan, which was edited for the Hakluyt Society in 1883 by Mr. E. Maunde Thompson, may have been another of the mass of India Office records complacently doomed to destruction by, of all men, Mr. Herman Merivale and Sir John Kaye. The original MS. of Sir W. Hedges's diary was bought in 1875 by Mr. R. Barlow of a bookseller named Bohn in the High-street of Canterbury, who, it would appear, had purchased it at "a sale of some things belonging to the fourth Baron Sondes, who died in 1874." Mr. Barlow copied the MS. carefully and accurately, intending to have it printed for circulation among his friends, but ultimately gave up the idea; and on the late Rev. James Long happening one day to see, and evince a deep interest in, the diary, the transcript was transferred to him in the hope of his being able to obtain its publication. This was at length undertaken by the Hakluyt Society. The original MS., much of which is in Hedges's holograph, Mr. Barlow, Sir Henry informs us in his preface, has restored to the archives of the India Office, where the authorities have of recent years become aware of the desirability of preserving such contemporary records, and of affording the freest facilities for their study and reproduction.

The life of Sir William Hedges is a typical illustration of the manner in which in the seventeenth century the middle classes of England gradually rose to wealth and influence through the trade then newly opened with India and the East. Sir William was born at Coole, co. Cork, in 1632, and he, his father, and grandfather are always formally styled Lacy alias Hedges. The first we know of him is as a Turkey merchant. Next we learn that in 1681 he was elected one of the twenty-four "Committees" or Directors of the East India Company, and in the same year sent out to India as Agent and Governor in the Bay of Bengal and the subordinate factories at Kasimbazar, Patna, Balasor, Malda, and Dacca. A corporal of approved fidelity, with twenty soldiers, was to be a guard to the Agent's person at the factory at "Hoogly," and to act against interlopers. He was, indeed, to establish in "the Bay" an administration independent of Fort St. George, and this with a view to better preserve discipline among the Company's factors in the Ganges valley, and the more successfully to wage the war incessantly carried on there against "interlopers, or those Englishmen who traded in India without the licence or outside the service of the Company. Thomas Pitt was originally one of the most intrepid of them. Hedges, an honest, upright man, through want of knowledge of the world, and of tact and firmness in dealing with men, miserably failed in his appointed task, which was altogether beyond his powers, and was recalled in 1683, the occasion of his dismissal being his interception of a letter addressed by one of his subordinates to Sir Josia Child. He fell, however, with decency, making during 1685-6 a most interesting journey through Persia, Mesopotamia, Hindustan, and Syria to England. He was knighted, and became alderman and sheriff of London and a Bank director; and he died, in 1701, in the full odour of respectability. His cousin Charles, who was in the law, was also knighted on being appointed a judge in the High Court of Admiralty, and after serving in Parliament from 1698 to 1713, and becoming one of the Secretaries of State in 1700 and again in 1702, died as judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1714. His nephew Robert, who went out to India with his uncle, and returned with him, died in 1717 as "President" of Bengal. It was thus that middle-class families in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries became influential, and many of them great, through their direct or indirect participation in "the wealth of Ormuz and of Ind." With their accumulated riches they everywhere bought up the fee simple of the lands about them; and with the rise of these freehold Anglo-Indian estates in Middlesex began the marvellous extension of modern London, where the nomenclature of the streets largely reflects the social revolution wrought by the trade of the Company.

The general interest of Sir William Hedges's diary begins with his journey home vid Muscat and Persia. He landed at Muscat, where the English were represented, as they continued to be down to the last days of John Company, by an influential Mohammedan merchant. At Kishm he took a house for the monsoon, and was laid up in it for two months with fever; yet he managed to start off for Ispahan by the end of July, 1685. He arrived at Shiraz on Aug. 25. There he was visited by Padre Agathangelo, a Carmelite, formerly resident many years at Bussorah, to whom he delivered a letter from Padre Marc Antonio Santucci, chief of the Jesuits in Bengal, and from whom he received another for the superior of the Carmelites at Ispahan. His last day in Shiraz (Aug. 30) he spent in visiting the ruins of Persepolis ("Chihal Minar," i.e., "Forty Columns"). On Sept. 9 he entered Ispahan, where he was warmly welcomed by the English there, and visited by the Carmelite and Dominican Friars, "and likewise by divers of the French Nation, as Jewellers and Watchmakers (some of them my acquaintance in Constantinople), Servants of the King of Persia," and by "Sigr. Fabricius, ye King of Swedeland's Envoy," and "Sigr. Van Havell, ye Dutch Commissarius." The latter had lived fifteen years in Persia. On Sept. 18 Hedges went out to view the King of Persia, Shah Suliman, "ride abroad to take ye aire." The king noticed him, and inquiring of Monsieur Sein, a French jeweller, who he was, and hearing that he was an Englishman, warmly welcomed him to court. Sir William, after expressing his appreciation of this honour, adds: "Indeed, the generality of mankind here are more respectful and civil to strangers than they are in any city in Christendome." On December 13 Hedges left Ispahan and began his journey towards Aleppo, by way of Baghdad, and in this part of his diary occur some of his most noteworthy entries. Under the date of January 8 he records that he "lay at Bisetoon near a very fine fountaine issuing out of a rock." This is the nearly perpendicular mountain of Behistan, near Kermanshah, famous for its bas-reliefs and inscriptions of Darius, the most valuable of all the Achæmenian remains in Persia. It is strange that Sir William Hedges, who had an eye for such things, did not notice these inscriptions, the decipherment of which by Sir Henry Rawlinson nearly fifty years ago afforded the students of cuneiform writing the clue to the restoration of the long lost history, literature, and religion of ancient Chaldæa, Assyria, and Babylonia. Hedges arrived at Baghdad on the 21st of February, 1686, and was there "most courteously invited and entertained by Padre Georgio di Vandosme," superior of the Capuchin Friars. There also he found awaiting him the "Imperial Command" procured at Constantinople by Mr. Samuel Lannoy, and forwarded to him by his cousin, Robert Wakeman at Aleppo, by which all the local Turkish governors were enjoined to afford him every assistance on his journey, and to exact from him "no more than was allowable by our Capitulation with ye Grand Sigr."

On the 11th of April he left Baghdad, crossing to the "Mesopotamian side of ye river Tigris. On the 13th his caravan proceeded westward "three hours riding toward Moosul or Ninave"; and on the 14th of April he visited "a great tower called Nimrod," built of sun-burnt bricks, lying close to his halting ground, which was evidently the great ruin eleven miles from Baghdad, now generally called Akerkuf, but also known as Tel-Nimrud, Minar Nimrud, and Kasr-Nimrud (the mound, or tower, or palace of Nimrod). April 16th he marched on "to Mansura six hours"; and on the 17th through cornfields all day, and halted among them; and so on day after day, until on the 30th he arrived at "Moosul or Ninave." He approached the city travelling for seven hours "over ye most pleasant fertile valley that we have yet seen, far exceeding any of the former, being full of three-leaved white, red, and yellow honeysuckle grasse, i.e., white, red, and yellow clover. Of "Moosul" he says, "This Citty stands on the Mesopotamian side of ye River Tigris.....On ye other side of ye River are to be seen vast Ruines of Buildings, which ye Natives say was Old Nineveh: this is on ye Caldea side." Four miles west of Mosul he found "a great old Church," to which the Christians of the city, "most of them of ye Nestorian Opinion," resorted every Saturday in the afternoon, and lay there all night on carpets, to be in time for their devotions the following morning.

This it a remarkable passage. So completely did the city of Nineveh disappear from view after its overthrow by the Scyths and Medes, that from Herodotus, in the fifth century B.C., to Ammianus Marcellinus, who served in the bodyguard of the Emperor Julian against the Persians A.D. 363, none of the Greek or Roman writers is able accurately to define its situation. Xenophon (B.C. 444 354) marched past it without recognising it as anything more than "the Median city of Mespila," then in great decay, which had been built on the very site of the palaces of Sennacherib and Assur-bani-pal (Koyunjik mound). Alexander the Great, after crossing the Tigris opposite Djerizet-ibn-Omar, in following the left bank of the river to encounter the army of Darius at Gaugamela, must have passed over the ruins of Nineveh, but, excepting Arrian, none of his historians even so much as names the city. Yet the local tradition of the neighbourhood has probably always preserved a correct knowledge of its site. Thus the Roman colony of Niniva Claudianus, which subsisted throughout the first, second, and third centuries, undoubtedly occupied the actual position of "ancient Ninus." It was the people of the place who gave the name of the vanished city to the decisive defeat inflicted by Heraclius on the army of Chosroes II., near Moms, A.D. 627. Ibn-Athir, in his description of the campaigns of Abdallah-ibn-Mœtemer in Mesopotamia, A.D. 637, locates the two forts of "Ninawi" and "Mosul" on the Tigris, exactly in the relative positions of Mosul on the right bank of the river, and the Koyunjik and Nebbi Yunus mounds on its left bank. Ricold, who travelled in Mesopotamia towards the end of the thirteenth century, refers to the traces of Nineveh; and Marignolli a little later, writing of Nineveh, observes:—

"I have been there, and stopped a fortnight in the adjoining towns, which were built out of the ruins of the city. . . . And on the opposite side of the river [Tigris] is a city built out of the ruins of Nyneve which is called Mousol."

The very next mention of the city is that made by Hedges, and it is immediately followed by that of Assemani (A.D. 1687-1768), the Syrian Maronite who became Archbishop of Tyre and librarian to the Vatican, and, in the account he gives of the mission sent, A.D. 1552, to Pope Julius II. by the rival candidates for the Nestorian Patriarchate of Mesopotamia, after describing Mosul, adds: "Two thousand paces distant from it, on the other bank of the river [Tigris], is Ninive."

After this the site of Nineveh was completely shrouded from Europe, until it was again restored to our knowledge by the splendid explorations of Botta and Sir A. Layard, and the marvellous researches of Sir Henry Rawlinson into the cuneigraphy of the ancient monuments of Persia, Babylonia, and Assyria. So great was the ignorance of Europe in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries of its site that even so illustrious a scholar as Niebuhr passed over it without observing it. Rich in 1820 actually examined the Nebbi Yunus and Koyunjik mounds opposite Mosul, and sent home a number of fragments from them to the British Museum; but he never suspected that they concealed the imposing palaces of the greatest of the Assyrian kings. It is most pleasing to find Sir William Hedges anticipating Sir A. Layard in his enthusiasm for the transient beauty of the plains of Mesopotamia about Mosul in the early springtide of the year. "We rode onward," writes Sir A. Layard on his departure from Mosul for the banks of the Khabour, "through a mass of flowers, reaching high above the horses' knees, and such as I had never before seen." And again: "Sutton rioted in the luxuriant herbage and scented air. I never saw him so exhilarated. 'What kef [delight] has God given us equal to this?' he continually exclaimed, as his mare waded through the flowers. 'It is the only thing worth living for. Ya Bej! What do the dwellers in cities know of true happiness, they that have never seen grass nor flowers!'"

The Hakluyt Society is indeed to be commended for the publication of this diary, and cordially congratulated on having found for it an editor in Colonel Yule, who since the recent appearance of the third volume has been made by the Queen a knight of the Order of the Indian Empire. And in conclusion we take the liberty to suggest that the romantic, and in many ways heroical, life of Sir Josia Child's "right trusty Job Charnock," as sketched by Sir Henry Yule, affords a subject for a novel altogether suited to the tastes of Mr. Walter Besant.

ELEPHANT-CATCHING IN MYSORE.

The Government of India has, at the request of the Government of Mysore, placed the services of Mr. Sanderson, of Kheddah operations fame, at the disposal of the Mysore Durbar, for a period of two months, to superintend a hunt for the capture of the elephants now roaming about in large numbers in the hills and jungles of the State. In November last Mr. Sanderson paid a preliminary visit to Mysore, and laid down a scheme, the work of which has been carried out by the local authorities during the hot weather months. The scene of the hunting operations is to be the Billigirirungun Hills, with which, writes the Englishman, most sportsmen must be familiar from reading "Thirteen Years among the Wild Beast of India." The trap in which it is hoped the elephants will be taken is situated in a gorge in the hills, which are here so steep for many miles of their frontage that the gorge in question and another road or two—which will be cut off and guarded—are the only means of communication with the low country that the wild elephants have. The site of the kheddah is, in fact, in a sort of Khyber Pass. Gates have been arranged at each end, closing a portion where the sides are so precipitous as to require but little artificial aid to make them impracticable to elephants. In the low country into which the pass debouches, paths have been cleared for beaters to occupy as steps to guide the elephants in the direction of the pass. All these works have been carried out while the elephants have been away in their cool hot-weather retreats in the depths of the hills; but since the rains have set in, more than one herd has passed through the gorge. Gates have been arranged overhead between trees at each end of the gorge, and it will only be necessary to drive a herd back when it visits the low country, and to drop the gates in the pass before and behind it to secure it. The work of getting the elephants into a small enclosure, and of securing and removing them, will then be carried out. Twelve elephants, thoroughly trained in kheddah work, were supplied from Dacca to the Government of Mysore, and shipped from Calcutta to Madras, in January last; and as there are few elephants in Mysore fit for the work but these, only a limited number of wild ones can be taken charge of, say under fifty, and if a large herd is captured, probably a number of the animals will be released. Mr. Sanderson has already left for Mysore, and probably a capture may be effected this month or early in July. Beyond his Highness the Maharajah of Mysore, the Resident, Sir Oliver St. John, and Mr. Ricketts, the Inspector-General of Forests, no visitors to the kheddah will be allowed. A few years ago a drive was spoilt, after thousands of Government rupees had been spent, by a gentleman nearly tumbling out of a tree and dropping a large sun-toppee in front of a herd of elephants in the Dooras just as they were entering a stockade.

THE Chief Justice of Madras has applied for the permanent addition of a fifth Judge to enable the High Court to dispose of arrears and to keep abreast of current work.

A SUM of Rs. 1,31,569 has been subscribed for Lady Roberts' homes in the hills for nursing sisters, and for Pundita Rukhmabai's Home for Hindoo Widows, which supports eighteen inmates. Most of the fund was subscribed in America.

THE Egerton Mills at Cawnpore have failed, the liabilities being 9½ lakhs, namely six lakhs to debenture holders and 3½ to banks and general creditors. The share capital is nine lakhs. The stock in hand and outstandings are valued at four lakhs. The buildings, machinery, &c., stand in the books at thirteen lakhs. It is possible a new company may be started to buy up the concern; but it is feared that the shareholders will fare badly. It is impossible yet to say how things will turn out. A good price may be got, as the company had several valuable contracts, which may be kept going.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—These Shares on Saturday were inquired for. Mysore rose 1-16, Nundydroog and Gold Fields of Mysore 1s., and several other descriptions, including Mysore Reefs, 3d. to 6d. Mysore Shares were last quoted 5 11-16 to 5¾, Nundydroog 21s. to 23s., Indian Consolidated 4s to 4s. 6d., Balaghat-Mysore (17s. 6d. paid) 7s. 6d. to 8s. 6d., ditto fully paid (£1) 9s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., Ooregum Ordinary 1¾ to 2, ditto Preference 1 15-16 to 2 1-16, Devala-Moyar 3s. 6d. to 4s., Nine Reefs 10s. to 10s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (18s. paid) 4s. 9d. to 5s. 3d., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s., South-East Mysore 6s. to 7s., Indian Glenrock 1s. 9d. to 2s., Gold Fields of Mysore 20s. to 22s., New South-East Wynaad 6d. to 1s., Mysore West (16s. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s., and Eastern Mysore 2s. to 3s.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL.

"Some minds improve by travel, others rather Resemble copper, wire, or brass,
Which gets the narrower by going farther."
—HOOD.

"STANDS Scotland where it did?" This is a question which may ere long have to be asked by the electors of Kirkaldy if Parliament persists in imposing upon the land of piety and porridge a certain English holiday—called Good Friday. Sir George Campbell, who has represented the "lang toon" since 1875, has protested against this impious imposition. "He was not," he told the House, "a Scotch Nationalist—he did not want to legislate for Scotland as a separate nation; but that country was an ancient Kingdom, and at least a large province of the Empire, and he thought it could never be intended that her institutions should be Anglicised by surprise. New Year's Day was by far the most important holiday in Scotland; and it was notorious that Good Friday was a day entirely unknown in shops or places of business in that country. He therefore hoped that that question would be reconsidered, and that what had been done by inadvertence in that House would be set right when the Bill went to the other House." The Commons, however, only laughed at the hon. member, and refused to listen to the persuasive tones of a voice which the late Lord Beaconsfield once likened to the rasping of a file against a nutmeg-grater. This obstinacy on the part of the House roused Sir George to further action, and so on Wednesday last he gave notice —"That unless the Government very seriously reconsidered their position in regard to violently imposing on Scotland the English Episcopal and Papistical institution of Good Friday, in utter disregard of the spirit and intent of the Act of Union, he would on an early day move—he would not say repeal of the Union, but for such a re-arrangement of the relations between England and Scotland as should make such an outrage impossible in the future."

After so terrible a threat one might be inclined to exclaim with Baillie Nicol Jarvie "Ma conscience!" but the House only inclined to further merriment, and received Sir George's warning with shouts of laughter. Such an insult to Scotland in general, and to Kirkcaldy in particular, cannot be paralleled in Parliamentary history. What now is to be done? Will Kirkcaldy bear tamely this affront to itself and to its honoured member, of whom it has been written:—"There are few men in Parliament better able to instruct it, and on more subjects than he, and none whom a perverse House (with no ear for the charms of a corncrake voice) is less inclined to listen to." Verily the House of Commons, like the world outside it, fails sometimes to recognise its greatest men. For nearly a decade and a half has Sir George Campbell been instructing it on every topic, political, social or financial, that has come before it, and yet it still continues to act the part of the deaf adder which will not list to the voice of the charmer, charm he never so wisely. Nay, more, it insists on forcing an extra holiday on the land which did itself the honour to produce Sir George Campbell. That New Year's Day is held by Scotchmen to be a sacred institution will be allowed by all who have passed that day in Scotland. It is a day on which every true Scot says with His Majesty in the old and well known burlesque—and he does so. Whether he might (with an effort) manage to get drunk on Good Friday too, if that day were made a national holiday also, may not even be surmised, for Sir George will not permit the "Papistical institution" to be forced upon his country. Scotland has wrongs enough to bear without adding this one. She has to put up with Christmas Day—but Good Friday, never. Perish the Union rather! And yet the House of Commons laughed at Sir George Campbell when he fulminated this threat!

It is sad to think that this "superior person" is thought so little of at home; but it is sadder to know that he is thought just as little of in India, where he also tried to make his mark. The mail brings us a copy of the leading paper in Bengal—that province over which Sir George once held sway—and this is what it says of him:—

Our ex-Lieutenant-Governor Sir George Campbell is positively indefatigable. There is not a subject that crops up in the House of Commons that is too great or too small for his comprehensive intellect. He has tackled the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the reduction of the National Debt. He assails the Postmaster-General, suspecting him of committing a job, in connection with the Foreign Telegraphs, the main ground for his suspicion being that he himself was once an unwitting party to a great job in Indian Canals. Sir George looks askance at Mr. Bradlaugh and Sir Roper Lethbridge. When they champion the wrongs of India in general, or of the Uncovenanted Service in particular, Sir George regards them as poaching on questions with which he could deal much more effectively.

A writer in the London Globe, commenting on a certain case, observes:—"If Sir George Campbell takes twenty-four hours to get an idea into his head he is not quite the right person to ask questions on the subject. We fear that Sir George Campbell is only playing to the ignorant gallery." This commentator is very severe on Sir George, but he evidently does not know his man. Sir George never took twenty-four minutes, much less twenty-four hours, to make up his mind on any point; and if he plays to a gallery it is to a gallery in which his own conceit and vanity occupy all the front seats.

Irreverence for a past Pro-Consul could hardly go further. It is very sad, but—shall it be said also?—very true.

THE INDIAN DRINK TRAFFIC.

Mr. CAINE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was true that in the official Gazette of June 30 last the Bombay Government published a resolution prohibiting the removal without permit of more than one gallon of the fresh juice of the cocoanut and other palms (called toddy) from place to place in any part of the Presidency; and whether it was the intention of the Bombay Government to place similar restrictions on the removal from place to place of mowra and other Native spirits, the large quantities of strong malt liquors brewed within the Presidency, and the various cheap alcoholic liquors which were being imported into Bombay in steadily increasing quantities.

Sir J. GORST: Yes: save that the regulation applies to fermented toddy and not to fresh juice. The Bombay Government have not communicated any such intention.

Mr. CAINE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he could lay upon the table of the House, print, and circulate to members the agreements of the Bombay Government with those Native States within the area whose Abkari department had either been taken over by the Bombay Government or otherwise assimilated.

Sir J. GORST: These agreements are not in the possession of the Secretary of State, but a synopsis of them is to be found in the Bombay Abkari reports for 1886-87 and 1887-88. Their general purport is to assimilate the system of the various Native States with that of the adjoining British districts.

Mr. CAINE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he would grant a return for the last ten years showing the gallonage of country spirits issued from sudder and outstills in the various provinces of British India with the revenue resulting therefrom, the quantities of spirits and malt liquor imported into India, and the quantities of malt liquor brewed in British India for each year respectively.

Sir J. GORST: The Secretary of State could not assent to such a return without previous communication with the Government of India, as the information would have to be collected in India, and he believes that the information as to the outstills could not be given even then.

INDIAN FAMINE INSURANCE.

Mr. CAINE asked the Under-Secretary for India whether, in spite of the refusal of the Parliamentary Committee of 1884 on Indian Railways to sanction the appropriation of any portion of the famine insurance fund to guarantee interest on capital raised for Indian railways, a portion of that fund had, in 1886-8, been hypothecated to pay interest charges on capital raised by the Indian Midland and Bengal Nagpore Railway Companies.

Sir J. GORST: There is no such thing as a famine insurance fund, which cannot, therefore, have been hypothecated. But in December, 1885, the then Secretary of State sanctioned the charge against the famine insurance grant during the ensuing five years of the interest on capital raised by the Indian Midland and Bengal Nagpore Railway Companies.

COUNCIL OF INDIA BILL.

The House having resumed

Sir J. GORST moved the second reading of this Bill, the object of which, he said, was to effect a saving in the whole charge of the Indian Revenue. The Secretary of State and the Council of India were of opinion that the charge might be reduced, thereby effecting a considerable saving to the Indian taxpayer, and nothing but the opposition mainly of the hon. member for Kirkcaldy prevented that valuable reform.

Sir G. CAMPBELL argued that under the guise of economy this Bill proposed to alter the constitution of the whole Government of India. It was impossible he could consent to so great a change being made without any discussion at all, and no discussion was possible on the stroke of midnight

It being now twelve o'clock the debate, by reason of the standing order, was adjourned.

THE PROJECTED DOCK AT BOMBAY.

Admiral FIELD asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he could state what progress had been made towards the completion of the long-promised first-class dock at Bombay for ironclads of Her Majesty's Fleet; had the site been selected; had the estimate of cost been approved; if so, what was the amount, and had the contract for its completion been given out; had the Indian Government and the Admiralty come to an agreement as to the portion of the cost of construction to be borne by each; and, if the above questions received answers in the negative, would he then state the cause of delay in carrying out the recommendations of successive naval commanders-in-chief for the last fifteen years, that a dock for first-class battleships should be constructed as a matter of vital necessity, and thus avoid the risk of sending ships in a disabled condition to Malta, distant 4,000 miles, to be docked and repaired, as was done in 1882.

Sir J. GORST: No progress has been made with the Bombay dock. A site was selected and estimates made, the cost amounting to £221,000. The Secretary of State in Council offered to contribute a moiety of this sum out of Indian revenues, but this offer has not yet been accepted by the Admiralty. In the meantime the Bombay Port Trust have offered to construct a dock which in the opinion of the Government of India will be sufficient to meet all Indian requirements.

Admiral FIELD asked whether the Treasury had refused the money, or whether the fault lay with the Admiralty.

Sir J. GORST could not answer that question.

MAILS TO INDIA AND AUSTRALIA.

Mr. KING asked the Postmaster-General, with reference to evidence given before the Select Committee on the Revenue Departments Estimates with regard to the revision of the arrangements with the French and Indian Post Offices for the conveyance of Her Majesty's mails to and from India, Australia, &c., whether he had been able to take any steps in the direction indicated; and whether he could hold out any prospect of a reduction in the rates fixed in July, 1887, or of improving any of the other conditions of the arrangements then made.

Mr. RAIKES: I am glad to inform the hon. member that I have been able to take such steps as he refers to and have succeeded in obtaining from the French and Italian Governments a further reduction of the transit rates payable for the special conveyance of the Eastern mails through France and Italy. It may interest the House to know that this reduction of rates, which will come into operation on January 1, 1890, is estimated to represent in the aggregate a saving of between £5,000 and £6,000 a year over and above the very large saving secured in July, 1887. Further, the porterage at Calais connected with these mails, hitherto separately paid for by this country at the rate of about £1,000 a year, will in future be provided by France free of special charge; and among other advantages recently gained I may mention an acceleration by two others of the special train service from Modane to Brindisi—an acceleration already in force—and the establishment of a special branch service from Foggia to Naples after the close of this year with a view to accelerating the mails for Australia carried by the Orient Steam Navigation Company from Naples. The House may also be interested to learn that under the arrangements made in July, 1887, and June, 1889, the Post Office Department is placed in a position to send, if it requires to do so, all classes of correspondence to the East by all sea routes at lower rates of postage than by the overland route. I have much pleasure in acknowledging the courteous attention which the French and Italian postal authorities gave to my representations, and the spirit of conciliation in which they eventually complied with my application for the foregoing concessions.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON asked whether the changes would admit of the rate to India being reduced from 5d. to 2½d.

Mr. RAIKES: No, Sir.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON asked the Postmaster-General whether he was yet in a position to give any information to the House as to the future dates of departure of the Australian mails for England from Adelaide.

Mr. RAIKES: The subject of the day of departure of the homeward Australian mails from Adelaide is still under the consideration of the Government. I may, however, say that the latest proposal is that the mails should leave Adelaide on Wednesday, thus arriving in London on Wednesday instead of on Monday as at present. This would involve a departure from Bombay on Sunday instead of on Friday; and I have therefore felt it necessary to consult the India Office, who are communicating with the Indian Government on the subject. I am also endeavouring to ascertain the views of merchants and others engaged in the Indian, Australian, and China trade as to the feasibility of such a change.

COOPERS-HILL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

The annual "public day" at the Royal Indian Engineering College, Coopers-hill, Egham, Surrey, has been celebrated. The large company of ladies and gentlemen who travelled from Waterloo-station by special train were received at the college by General Sir A. Taylor, the president, among them being Lord Cross (Secretary of State for India), Sir J. Coode, General Sir A. Alison, General Sir W. Olpherts, Sir J. Hooker, General Strachey, and General H. S. Stanton. The prize distribution was presided over by Lord Cross, who first of all called upon the president of the college for his annual report.

The President, in the course of his summary of the work of the college for the past year, said he was glad to say that his general report was a fairly satisfactory one. Lord Cross, acting upon the recommendation of the college board, had been pleased to appoint one of their students, Mr. E. G. Coutts, a Fellow of the college. That was the highest honour that could be conferred there in connection with good work. Mr. Coutts had made 83·8 per cent. of the marks that it was possible for him to make, which was a number that had not been reached, certainly for the last nine years, by any student of the college. At the beginning of the past session there were 136 students in the college, of whom somewhat less than a third were leaving that day, some (the majority) for engineering appointments in India, and some for posts in the Forest Department of that country. With the work of the Forestry Probationers at the college he was fairly satisfied, but he regretted that the length of their course remained at two and-a-quarter years only, since from practical experience they had found that period too short. The instruction, too, in that line had been seriously injured by there not being a forest near for the suitable and practical illustration of the subjects of the study. The matter had been represented officially, and he hoped Lord Cross would do what he could for them. An examination of the college had recently been held by outside examiners, and, although some of their criticisms were perhaps a little sharp, most of the reports were very favourable.

Lord Cross then distributed the scholarships and prizes. Mr. J. A. Craven won the Argyll Scholarship, given by Lord Cross, for natural science; Mr. F. E. Bull was awarded the scholarship in applied mechanics, given by the Vice-President of the Council of India; Mr. E. G. Coutts received the scholarship established by the Fellows of Coopers-hill; for the second year students, the scholarship in engineering on the Coopers-hill endowment fund, established by the civil engineers of the Public Works Department, was won by Mr. A. R. Walsh; Mr. R. H. Reid was appointed to the scholarship in applied mechanics, given by the Vice-President of the Council for India; the Chesney Scholarship, for mathematics, fell to Mr. W. E. G. Belcher; and Mr. A. P. Grenfell won the scholarship given by the president for proficiency in forestry. Among the first year students Mr. G. Richards was elected to the Foundation Scholarship established by the civil engineers of the Public Works Department.

At the conclusion of the distribution General Sir A. Alison addressed a few words of congratulation and advice to the students.

Lord Cross in the course of his concluding remarks said he must congratulate the college and everyone connected with it upon its present state. The report they had heard, he thought, was satisfactory in almost all its bearings, and it was quite clear that very excellent work was being done. It was very satisfactory to him, as Secretary of State for India, to find that the college was now becoming self-supporting, not simply because it saved the funds of India but because it showed that the education given there was being appreciated. It was a great delight to him to find that it was not the mind simply that was educated, but also the body. He entered heartily into all their games. But beyond that in the educational part of the business he was struck by the fact that they were taught in what he might call a sensible manner—they were taught to observe for themselves. They were not taught by mere book learning, but they were taught to think for themselves, and not simply to read what other people had thought for them. It was that habit of thinking for themselves which would come out in their after life. They were most of them going out to live in India. He envied them the career that was before them. He could not think of anything more hopeful; they had a grand field before them which they must plough and work for themselves. He prophesied a high career for some of those to whom he had delivered prizes. At the present moment amongst other great works they were in the south of India turning a great river through a mountain for the purposes of irrigation. And, indeed, they had every variety of engineering before them; they had a field that was worth ploughing. There was another thing also with which he was very satisfied; they had at last got a school of forestry established in England. In that matter they were far behind other countries, such as Germany and France. He should be delighted if he could further the president's view in finding an area of forest somewhere near the college; he would do all he could in the matter. The last word he would say to them was that they were going out to a great field where it was absolutely necessary that the British supremacy should be maintained—the British supremacy had given to India all which she at present enjoyed. And if they wanted to add to our power in India, if they wanted to add to the building which he had built up there, if they wanted to add to the happiness of the people of India, then they must be true to themselves, true to the traditions of their college, and true to their country. What he meant was that they must show themselves Englishmen in the character of Englishmen, for it was the English character which had wrought much good in India.

Three cheers were then given for Lord Cross, and after luncheon had been served in the school the party returned by special train early in the afternoon.

DUST TEA.

An authority on the subject says:—

Dust tea say contemporaries is such a common commodity everywhere, and spoken of as being the real spirit of the beverage, that it is as well to explain what it really is. Everyone goes in for the economy of it, unsuspicious of the fact that its use is merely carrying into fulfilment the ancient law that a man shall eat a peck of dirt during his lifetime. First of all, and least harmful, is dust from the fires. Then we have the usual dust of a factory; a good deal of dust off coolies' feet, then the dust generated in breaking "red leaf"—a good deal of it. The real tea dust, which is really valuable, supplies but a small portion. Tea is gathered, rolled, fermented, and fired, then sifted. The unmanageably large leaves are picked out and rubbed through a large-meshed sieve. The larger pieces go to form low grades of tea; the small goes to the dust-bin. The better qualities are sieved and go to the bins "Pekoe See," "Pekoe," and "Broken Pekoe." When these three last bins are full, the contents are rolled in a thin cloth, separately, of course. The dust falls through and the tea is boxed. A certain quantity is put into the chests, a cloth put over, and a "mild Hindoo" packs it down with his feet and weight of body. During the process much of the dust on his feet gets on to the cloth, which is then taken off to allow more tea being put in. The cloth is shaken, put in, and again pressed until the filling is complete. When the whole of the tea is thus disposed of the floors are swept, and these sweepings form "dust" tea. To those who know its composition a nice tasty infusion it is. Nothing pleases proprietors more than selling this refuse, and all it realises is clear gain. Curious it seems that if you send to a plantation where they retail tea they will charge you as much as their product of the best commands in London, and fob you off with a second or third-class article. The reason to outsiders may seem hidden, but not to the initiated; the more of the low class you can get rid of locally the larger will be the proportion of high class to be put into the market in Mincing-lane and higher will the "average" (price of the shipment) be made to appear. It is very easy to learn to distinguish good from bad tea; and if you like flavour, a small quantity of good will give more than twice the quantity of low class. A-1 tea, clear and bright on infusion, gets muddy on cooling. Dust, on the contrary, will deposit its mud on standing.

AN EXPLOSIVE STILTON.—According to a local correspondent of the Simla paper, it is a dangerous thing to purchase the renowned Stilton cheese in jars—at any rate from some of the Simla purveyors. He says:—The other day I got a jar of Stilton cheese from one of the principal Native shopkeepers, and was gently and slowly opening it when the jar exploded, the pieces flying all over the room. Half of the contents was on the floor, and fizzing for some time, showing that fermentation had begun. I had a narrow escape, and one of my children, who was standing by, was very much startled by the loud report. I think it will be the last time I shall try a jar of Stilton cheese

THE Bombay Chamber of Commerce has protested against a too rigid enforcement of the Merchandise Marks Act. Section 10, requiring that the place of manufacture, as well as the country, shall be conspicuously indicated on all goods of foreign manufacture bearing the name or trade mark of any trader or dealer in the United Kingdom or British India, would, it is urged, work unfairly if enforced, and it should be rescinded.

THE health of both troops and police in Upper Burma continues unsatisfactory. The Norfolk Regiment is still among the Chin hills, suffering severely from scurvy and fever. At Lashio, in the Shan State of Southern Theinnee, where 300 of the military police are stationed as the escort of Lieutenant Daly, superintendent of the Northern Shan States, the men are suffering severely from fever, a large percentage of them being in hospital.

AND

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armie, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes :—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole prorietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminste Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 16th July; from Allahabad and Madras to the 14th July; and from Calcutta to the 14th July.

IN the Legislative Council, July 10th, the Bill amending the Steamship Act was referred to a Select Committee, and the Bill making better provision for the organisation and administration of Municipalities in the Central Provinces was introduced.

THE next meeting of the Council was fixed for the 31st July.

IT is not unlikely that discussion on minor heads of the Provincial Budgets will be permitted where Provincial Legislative Councils exist. This is a natural extension of the principle of allowing discussion upon the Imperial Budget in the Supreme Legislative Council.

THE Committee appointed to reorganise the administrative arrangements of the North-West Provinces has completed its labours and written its report.

THE Viceroy's reply to the Maharaja of Kashmir's letter was sent direct to his Highness at Jammu, a copy going simultaneously to the Resident at Srinagar.

A DESPATCH from the Secretary of State regarding Mr. Beames' promotion to the Board of Revenue has been received by the Government of India. As in Mr. Phillips' case, it simply draws the attention of the Government of India to the question put in Parliament, and it will be handed on to the Bengal Government for report.

THE Government of Madras have informed the Government of India that the earthwork of the proposed East Coast Railway, which was to have been put in hand at once as a relief work in the Ganjam district, does not require to be started for the present.

THE Government of India's views on the report of the jail inquiry conducted by Drs. Lethbridge and Walker will be shortly communicated to the Local Governments.

A SUCCESSOR to Sir Comer Petheram as Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University has not yet been nominated. The Hon. Mr. Scoble was offered the Vice-Chancellorship, but declined, on the ground that the working head of the University should be a permanent resident of Calcutta.

MAJOR J. MILEY acts as Controller of Accounts, Eastern Circle, Bengal, vice Lieutenant-Colonel Cautley, who has been granted fifteen months' furlough.

CAPTAIN F. E. YOUNGHUSBAND, of the King's Dragoon Guards, whose overland journey from China to Kashmir stamped him as one of our foremost explorers, is about to proceed to Leh, whence he will examine the northern passes of Kashmir.

MR. GRIESBACH was expected in Simla early in August from Mazar-i-Sharif.

NO further details have been received of the rebellion in Badakshan; but the Amir expresses little anxiety regarding the outbreak, Afghanistan generally being quiet.

BOH NGA TOKE, a notorious dacoit leader, who had given much trouble in the Eastern Division of Upper Burma, met with his death in Yetago lock-up on the 9th of July. He induced his fellow-prisoners to make an attempt to escape, and headed an attack on the guard, disarming and wounding two. The reinforcements who came up had to fire on the gang, and Boh Nga Toke was shot dead.

THE Phunkan Tsawbaw has paid up the last rupee of the fine inflicted upon him; and the Kachin chief, who was detained at Bhamo as hostage for the payment, has been released. The effect of last season's operations in the north of Burma is now beginning to be seen in the revival of trade. Quite recently jade stone to the value of Rs. 20,000 and about 10,000 viss weight of India-rubber arrived at Bhamo from Mogoung within the space of three or four days.

MR. POLLARD, of Messrs. Symes and Co., Simla, well-known in racing circles, was found dead in bed on July 10th. The cause of death is supposed to be an overdose of chloral. His brother died from a similar cause last year.

OWING to serious floods in the Indus the main line of the North-Western Railway is in great danger. The height of the river at Attock has reached fifty feet. One of the Sind Canal protection bunds has given way at Larkana; forty men have been drowned, and the country is ten feet under water. The heaviestflood that has been known in the Bokan for some years occurred on the night of the 4th July. The High Level line above Hirok was completely breached in many places, and the entire length between Horok and Rindli has been either breached or blocked with boulders. Considerable damage has been caused to the permanent way, and the line will be closed to traffic for a month at least. The railway beyond Quetta is also damaged this side of Killa Abdulla.

IN accordance with Sir Lepel Griffin's suggested settlement in Cashmere several military officers in Simla intend to apply to Government for leave to take up the land jointly. They propose to purchase a nullah outright, with forest and all other rights, and to devote themselves to sheep farming and other pursuits.

THE publication by the Bombay Gazette of a telegraphic summary of Mr. Ommaney's Memorandum, which is included in the Blue-book relative to the Crawford case (laid on the table of the House of Commons on the 26th ult.), has created an intense sensation in Bombay.

A SAD affair has occurred at Simla. A Mr. Daly, clerk in the Military Works Department, and one of the Simla Volunteers, shot himself with his rifle in a most deliberate manner. He placed the muzzle against his heart, and pushed back the trigger with a stick. The deceased left a letter declaring his fatal intention.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL RICE has been appointed to succeed Sir Benjamin Simpson as Sanitary Commissioner and Surgeon-General to the Government of India upon the latter's retirement.

NEARLY half-a lakh of rupees had been subscribed towards Lady Roberts' Fund for establishing homes in the hills for Nursing Sisters when the last statement was issued, and since that time about Rs. 29,000 have been added. In regard to work done, "Homes" are now ready at Murree, Kasauli and Wellington. At Murree the house is large enough to admit of its being used in part as an officers' hospital, for rooms being set aside for this purpose. Remembering the wave of sickness which has swept over military cantonments in Upper India, we need not be surprised to hear that these quarters have been almost constantly occupied both last year and this. The Kasauli Home, not being required as yet for Lady Nurses, is prepared for the reception of sick officers, and is under the charge of a qualified nurse, Miss James. The proposed increase in the number of Nursing Sisters in India has been postponed by the India Office for a time—a very short time only it is hoped—and meanwhile Lady Roberts trusts to be able to supplement the Government nurses by employing two or more qualified nurses at stations where they are much needed. This will entail extra expenditure, and to help in meeting this further subscriptions are urgently needed. Those who know what splendid service the Nursing Sisters have already done in India will, it is hoped, give their aid to a Fund the purposes of which are admirable in every way. A statement will shortly be published showing what the Homes have cost up to date, and what is the general financial position of the Fund.

NOTES.

THE latest news from India will be found in the telegrams from the Times correspondents, which will be found in another column. The chief items are that grain prices have fallen in Ganjam and brought about an improvement in the situation there, and that all cause for anxiety regarding famine in Tirhoot has disappeared.

DISASTROUS landslips have occurred in Simla and its vicinity; but it is satisfactory to learn that although the meeting of the Legislative Council has been postponed until the 15th inst., this fact and all other facts "have had no influence in checking the season's gaieties."

THE correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing from Calcutta on Sunday gives also the gratifying intelligence that the Government of India is taking matters easy about the Sikkim business. There being no prospect of a settlement, we are informed that the Government is disposed to leave the business to settle itself, and (so the correspondent complacently informs the public) it is not believed that the Thibetans will give any further trouble.

REUTER, however, sends a little "ruffling" intelligence from the City of Palaces on Sunday also, to the effect that the Indian Government has received official information that the Transvaal Government has decided to class British Indian merchants with Turks and Chinese as aliens, and accordingly ordered them immediately to leave the towns within its territory. The Indian Government, it is said, is communicating with the Home Government on this breach of international obligation. We do not insinuate that Reuter's agent evolved this information from the depths of his inner consciousness, but it seems strange that we should first hear of "this breach of international obligation" from Calcutta. Who are the British "Indian merchants" who have been classed with Turks, Chinese, and other infidels? Parsees or Bengalee Baboos?

A MANIFESTO by the would-be Boulanger of India—Dhuleep Sing—will hardly turn out a profitable speculation for him either pecuniarily or politically. He is wise to bid for popular favour by declaring the repudiation of the public debt, by abolishing taxation, prohibiting cow killing, and letting all jail-birds go free—but he is other wise in asking in lieu of these blessings that his subjects in lower India should each give him a pice monthly, and his beloved Punjabis one anna. Both peoples will give him nothing but laughter; and so no evil is likely to follow from the publication of his absurdities in the Native Press.

OLD Anglo-Indians who remember the exciting time of the Port Canning Reclamation Scheme in Calcutta will read with a little interest, perhaps, if with little surprise, the statement of the Times correspondent, to the effect that Calcutta is being poisoned by the attempt which then met with so much favour, of reclaiming and fertilising the salt marshes in the vicinity of the Port of Canning. If it be true, as stated, that the suburban statistics show an increase in the mortality bills some 20 per thousand, an outbreak of plague may well be dreaded, and the City of Palaces considered in a perilous state. But, after the many years' expenditure of several millions of rupees in making Calcutta perfect as regards sanitation, it is curious that it is only now discovered that there is a risk to health in throwing daily in the immediate vicinity of the town 25,000 cubic feet of putrescent filth to foster in its moisture under a tropical sun.

IT is to be hoped that the Volunteer movement in India is not altogether in so disorganised a state as the writer to an Indian newspaper describes. The men, he says, "want coaxing to come to parade. Very often nothing will draw them out but draught beer. When a Volunteer dons his uniform he considers himself licensed to commit any excess either in eating, drinking, swearing, or bearing. As to language the Volunteer considers himself a unit of the English Army in Flanders a century ago. A Volunteer Camp is a big drunk." Surely an enemy—or a Bengali Baboo who would be a Volunteer but cannot—must have been the author of this calumny.

THE Indian authorities are very properly interesting themselves in fortifying the North-West frontier of India; but there are other places of the British Empire in the East which require guarding. "Burma should be fortified," said Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., in one of his addresses delivered in India, and that he was right may be judged from the following extract from a letter from an officer of the Salvation Army in the East to his Chief at Home:—"Rangoon must be bombarded, and Hell and the Devil routed at once. It is money that is required to do it, so send the needful along quickly."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, AUG. 4.

The latest report from Ganjam shows some improvement in the situation. Grain prices had fallen. The imports of food grains amounted to 381 tons, and there were available for sale 1,400 tons. The number employed on relief works was 13,400. Fifty-eight relief inspection circles had been constituted, and 45 kitchens established, which were feeding 9,000 persons, mostly children. The number on the village relief lists was 49,400, of whom 12,500 were women, and 29,700 children. The rainfall was excessive, and the crops in two districts had been attacked by insects. The deaths from cholera numbered 641.

All cause for anxiety in Tirhoot has disappeared.

Cholera of a virulent type has broken out in the Coimbatore central gaol.

An appeal by the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, of an extraordinary character, addressed to the Natives of India, is published in the Press. In provision of the future, and as his Royal decree, he demands a monthly subscription of one pice from each of the 250,000,000, but from each in the Punjab one anna. The public debt of India is (in this document) repudiated; the payment of taxes is forbidden, cow-killing is prohibited, prisoners are to be released, and all persons who have suffered from tyranny and injustice, caused by the British Government, are to be reinstated in their rights. He purposes entering India with a European army, with the material support of Russia.

There is no news of importance from Afghanistan. Umra Khan of Jundol is reported to be rapidly consolidating his hold upon the conquered territory of Dir. The Kamdesh tribes of Kafirs inhabiting the Lahori Pass have made submission to him. He intends to construct a fort at Harnai, in Dir.

The birthday of the Maharajah of Cashmere has been celebrated with the usual pomp, notwithstanding his virtual deposition. A number of prisoners were released by the Council in honour of the occasion. The Viceroy has formally recognised the Maharajah's brother, Rajah Amar Singh, as president of the Cashmere Council, in place of Rajah Ram Singh.

Captain Durand and his party will winter at Gilgit. They arrived at Astor on July 15. The Government has it in contemplation to re-establish a permanent Agency at Gilgit, so as to control more effectively the frontier policy of Cashmere.

The meeting of the Legislative Council at Simla has been postponed to the 14th inst. A rather serious landslip has recently occurred at Simla, blocking up the Mall, but it does not seem to have had much influence in checking the season's gaieties. A disastrous landslip is also reported, which carried away an entire village at Jutogh. The rains generally have proved excessive.

A serious boat accident lately occurred on the Indus. A party of sixty Natives was proceeding from Nowshara to Shamshidabad, when the boat was upset in a freshet, and fifty were drowned.

A cavalry camp of exercise will be formed at Miridhi in the cold weather. The force will be split up into two divisions, separated by a space of sixty miles, over which they will work against each other, under service conditions. Prince Albert

Victor will join the camp, and take part in the field operations.

The preparations for the Lushai expedition are being rapidly completed, and some 2,000 Punjabi coolies have been specially engaged.

There has been a fresh outbreak of strikes in several directions in Calcutta. The railway coolies struck work because they were forbidden to swarm on the pontoon landing-stage at Howrah. The shopkeepers at Baroda closed their shops as a protest against certain provisions of the new Stamp Act. In Bombay the street scavengers have struck for higher wages. The epidemic has even spread down to Colombo, where the harbour boatmen have struck work, seriously inconveniencing shipping business.

A Native magistrate is being prosecuted at Indore for harbouring the famous freebooter, Tantia Bheel. The case is one of great interest, and has excited much public attention. A formidable gang of Mahratta burglars was lately captured at Bombay, and all were tried and convicted. They had been concerned in no less than forty-five burglaries, mostly carried on in daylight. A Native Treasury clerk in Bombay has been suspended, being charged with extensive defalcations with public money.

The Parsees have finally determined to hold a public meeting, and draw up a protest on behalf of their community against the unfounded and wholesale aspersions on it published by the Bombay Government with reference to the Crawford Commission. Copies of this protest will be sent to the Government of Bombay, the Viceroy, and the Secretary of State.

At the last meeting of the Calcutta Municipal Council Dr. O'Brien protested in emphatic language, supported by hygienic statistics, against the existing insanitary system of disposing of the refuse of this city. Sixty huge waggon-loads of the foulest refuse, he said, were borne daily by the municipal railway, and scattered over a deadly swamp, closely bordering on densely-populated suburbs. Thus 25,000 cubic feet of putrescent filth were daily flung into the marsh to fester in its moisture beneath a tropical sun. Hence the production of every form of disease. No words could possibly depict the loathsome conditions of these salt-water lakes. The air for miles round was poisoned with the deadly effluvia emanating from this noisome spot.

If these salt-water marshes continue to be polluted in this manner it needs no prophetic spirit to predict an outbreak of plague in the city. The suburban statistics show that this system has increased the mortality in the suburbs some 20 per thousand, and the evil is increasing every day. It is intolerable that a system so dangerous to the sanitary condition of a large and wealthy city like Calcutta should be permitted to continue.

The new Government rupee loan of Rs. 2,00,00,000 has been favourably placed at just under par. The amount tendered was Rs. 7,22,43,500, the average rate being Rs. 99 14 annas 11 pies.

BURMA.

RANGOON, AUG. 13.

It is unlikely that the Commander-in-Chief will visit Burma during the next cold weather, as had been anticipated. General Roberts fears that he will not be able to carry out his intention of making a tour in Assam, whence he was to proceed to Burma.

The military operations in the next cold weather will include the opening up of communication between Chittagong and Burma. The country between the Chin Hills and Chittagong is quite unexplored.

General Gordon has taken steps to relieve the detachment of the Norfolk Regiment which is suffering from scurvy and sickness in the Chin Hills.

The nomination of Mr. MacDonnell to officiate as Chief Commissioner has been very favourably received. It is generally recognised that he is specially well qualified for the difficult task of reorganising Upper Burma, owing to his large and varied experience and his proved ability. The Rangoon Gazette states that Sir C. Crosthwaite is not likely to return to Burma, but that he will probably be provided for elsewhere. In that case Mr. MacDonnell will receive the permanent appointment as Chief Commissioner.

Sir Edward Buck has returned to Calcutta, Colonel Strahan, R.E., remains to inspect the Survey Office. A complete scheme for the survey and settlement of Upper Burma has been drawn up, and work will be commenced in the Kyoukse and Mandalay districts in November. A topographical survey of Mergui has also been ordered, with a view to aid in the search for minerals, especially tin.

The power to act as sessions judges, recently conferred on some very junior members of the Commission, has been withdrawn by the local Government.

The Government apparently proposes to maintain for some time a large military force in various parts of Upper Burma. A plot of 451 acres is being taken up for a military cantonment at Myingyan as a central position on the Irrawaddy.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT RESIDENCES.

(Bombay Gazette.)

In the present state of the Government finances it goes without saying that every possible economy should be exercised in the expenditure of public money. Many suggestions have been made by the Finance Committee and other public bodies for economy in the expenses of the Viceregal and other gubernatorial residences, but without, as far as our information goes, very much benefit to the Indian Exchequer. One of the gravest objections to the annual exodus to the hills is the expense which it involves, and we think it is incumbent on those responsible for the care of the finances to show not only that the exodus is conducted on as economical a plan as possible, but that all possible economies are made in other directions to keep down the expenses of the headquarters of the several Governments. The exodus to the hills involves, amongst other things, the provision of a Government House in the hills, and we have heard a good deal of the expense involved in the erection of the new Viceregal Lodge at Simla; of the silk hangings at Ootacamund, while our own Governor has lately informed us that his only extravagance in the Government House direction has been in sundry alterations at Bella Vista, Mahableshwar. Granted that these extra expenses at Simla, Ootacamund, and Mahableshwar are to some extent justifiable, we should like to inquire whether any endeavour has been made to effect a compensating reduction in the expenditure on Government residences at Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay. At Calcutta, when the Viceroy resided there all the year round, there was possibly some excuse for supplementing the palatial Government House with a suburban residence at Barrackpore, but there can surely be little need for such an arrangement now, and we think that in the interests of economy Barrackpore Park should be given up as a Viceregal residence. It is, of course, a pity to give it up, but it is clearly an extravagance to maintain it simply to enable the Viceroy to spend perhaps a dozen Sundays in the year there as a change from Calcutta. The place is large enough for some more useful purpose than this, and might perhaps be utilised as the residence of some high official whose duties require him to reside at Calcutta all the year round. At Madras, too, there can scarcely be any present justification for the maintenance of Guindy Park as well as Government House; and now the Governor has a summer palace at Ootacamund he should forego the luxury of one of the two palaces at Madras. At Bombay we have apparently the maximum of expense with the minimum of comfort to the Governor, and we think that true economy would be promoted were the Governor to entirely give up the Government House at Parell and Malabar Point as well as the Council Hall in the Secretariat for a suitable Government House to be built on the site selected for the purpose at the Cooperage. The Governor is resident here for at most four months in the year, and that at a season when limited house accommodation can easily be supplemented by tents on special occasions. The present arrangements are eminently unsatisfactory and very extravagant. Government House, Parell, has not been used at all by Lord Reay, and was seldom used by Sir Richard Temple. The situation is so remote and now so insanitary, and the building is in every way little adapted to modern requirements, that it is practically abandoned, yet it costs no small sum to maintain it. The bill for "water" for the vacant house is something alarming, and came under the notice of the Finance Committee; and the charges for putting the grounds in order after Sir Richard Temple's neglect of the place were, we understand, sufficient to build a moderately-sized family residence. Taking all these things together, the sooner the place is given up the better. Government House, Malabar Point, must of course be maintained until some more suitable residence is provided, and the same remark applies to the "Council Hall" and its appendages in the Secretariat. These occupy perhaps one-eighth of the whole building, and involve the sacrifice of office accommodation of the capital value of one and a-half lakhs of rupees, which is much required for office work. The provision of "Council Halls," apart from Government Houses, is apparently peculiar to this Presidency; no such arrangement exists in Calcutta, and it would be unnecessary at Bombay and at Poona had the Government Houses been built within a reasonable distance from the social and business centres of those places. In the interests of the Bombay provincial revenues the arrangement should now cease. The Gunnesh Khind site is so distant from Poona that it is difficult to understand on what principle it was chosen. A much cheaper building nearer the city would be far more convenient alike to the Governor and to the public.

A STAFF CORPS ANOMALY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

From time immemorial the military authorities have had a very delicate task in making promotions in the service run smoothly; but at intervals they seem to raise obstacles in their own path. One of the latest anomalies that has come under our notice is the promotion of 2nd Lieutenants to the rank of Lieutenant on permanent appointment to the Staff Corps. In the British service it generally takes between two and three years, if not more, for a 2nd Lieutenant to obtain his Lieutenancy; but in the Staff Corps it is possible for a 2nd Lieutenant to be promoted to Lieutenant after less than six months' service. Many military men will probably wonder how: it is simple enough, however, according to the rules. There being no such rank as 2nd Lieutenant in the Staff Corps, a 2nd Lieutenant, on permanent transfer to that Corps, is given the rank of Lieutenant. Now, an officer's appointment to the Staff Corps reckons from the day he first joined a Native regiment on probation, so his promotion to Lieutenant is accordingly given with effect from the same date. But then it may be said that an officer must serve one year at least with his British regiment before he is allowed to join a Native regiment. This is the rule. It was, however, relaxed last year, owing to the difficulty experienced in filling up the large number of vacancies in the Staff Corps, and officers were permitted to be appointed, on probation, with only a few months' service in a British regiment, provided they had passed their drills. Thus it came about that 2nd Lieutenants joined a Native regiment with less than six months' service, and their promotion to Lieutenant and their appointment to the Staff Corps was regulated accordingly. Even now, without any temporary relaxation whatever, it is evident that, under these rules, a 2nd Lieutenant may be promoted to Lieutenant in the Staff Corps with effect from a date when he had only one year's service—which is less than half the time it would take the same officer to attain that rank in his British regiment. Promotion of this order is not also only an anomaly when compared with the promotion obtaining in British regiments, but it is likely to press hard on officers who join the Staff Corps. For instance, a 2nd Lieutenant of one year's service joins a Native regiment to-day, and a 2nd Lieutenant of eighteen months' service does the same thing to-morrow. On permanent transfer to the Staff Corps the "one year" officer will be a senior Lieutenant to the other, although the latter has more service than the former, and may also have passed all his examinations first. We are, of course, well aware that the promotion to captain in the Staff Corps is a time promotion (that is, all lieutenants are promoted to captains after eleven years' service from the date of first commission—four of which must have been in the Staff Corps), and that, therefore, the "eighteen months" officer will turn the tables again by being promoted to Captain six months before the "one year" officer. This, however, only makes it all the more an anomaly. For nine years or so the "eighteen months" officer will be deprived of his seniority; and if the two officers be in the same regiment, the "one year" officer will, if qualified, be the first on the roll for all regimental appointments, officiating or otherwise. Such an arrangement is a hardship as well as an anomaly.

MR. CAINE AND THE EXCISE ON BEER.

(Englishman.)

Mr. Caine is riding his hobby as to the drink question in India to the bitter death. His latest departure has been to address a question to the Under-Secretary of State for India, having for its object to urge on the Government to impose a tax on Indian brewed beer. The bottom is at once knocked out of this argument by the simple consideration that, even with Indian brewed beer, as at present, untaxed, practically not a single native of India ever indulges in the beverage. It is consumed solely by Europeans, and more largely among the British army in India than among any other class. As Indian brewed beer is wholesome, and cheaper than the imported article, the army authorities in India have of late years been enabled to effect a very considerable economy by its use. Mr. Caine can hardly desire to tax Tommy Atkins an extra penny for every glass of beer he consumes; but if he wishes to promote temperance among the natives he is simply attacking a shadow. It is a curious irony of fate that Mr. Caine, by putting his inane question in the House of Commons, is playing the game of the English and foreign breweries. Since Indian beer has come into competition with the imported article the army demand for the latter has largely fallen off. Where Englishmen are congregated, beer will ever be considered a necessary of life. This fact has nothing to do with the question of the abuse by individuals of beer or any other intoxicant. Beer by most Englishmen is looked upon as an article of food. The question then comes to this:—Is India to be allowed to brew its own beer, or is Mr. Caine to crush a rising industry, and compel us to bring all our supplies across the sea, thereby simply playing into the hands of the British and foreign brewers? The latter idea is preposterous. We are thus presented with the absurd spectacle of Mr. Caine, the arch-prophet of temperance, championing the cause of brewers in Europe.

LOOKING AHEAD.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Though all must know how ill we are prepared for the great war which may be approaching official routine goes on with an unconsciousness which affords a fine spectacle of unshaken nerve and confidence. Governments busy themselves with petty details of local business, Boards of Revenue spin out circulars, and with the aid of Commissioners worry the district officers out of all feeling of self-reliance and courage of initiative; the High Courts, the Lower Courts and the Bar proceed merrily with the litigation of the agriculturists; the spending departments abate no whit of their lavishness—throughout the Empire all but the military authorities appear sublimely indifferent to the fact that the fate of that Empire may presently, most probably before long, tremble in the balance. At this moment every part of the Empire is practically undefended and open to attack. The Native army, cut down to dimensions merely adequate for the internal garrison of the recently extended Empire, is still without a reserve. The scheme for utilising some of the forces of the Feudatory chiefs, and for so reducing the rest as to leave no source of danger therein, is still in its infancy. The Indian army is without organised transport, and is largely armed with obsolete weapons. The military communications on the Frontier are only now in course of construction. The immensely important chord line from Umballa to Bahawulpur, and that from Umballa to Delhi, without which the Delhi Bridge has no military significance—these have yet to be undertaken. India, in fact, is still quite unprepared for the war, and the cause of delay is in the lack of funds. Are not these facts to awaken every official Englishman to a sense of the magnitude of the emergency, and of the absolute necessity for directing all thoughts and energies to the forwarding of military preparations, especially facilities of transport, to the provision of funds by the exercise of the utmost economy possible, by the stopping of all leaks of expenditure, by the development to the utmost of all sources of income which his energies can increase?

THE BURMA OIL FIELDS.

(Englishman.)

One of the sources of future wealth in Burma has often been predicted as likely to be its oil fields, and it may probably be for this reason that Dr. Fritz Noetling, Palæontologist of the Geological Survey of India, was lately deputed to make a survey and report on the oil fields of Twingaung and Beme, which he has done in a very complete and satisfactory manner. These fields have hitherto been erroneously called the Yenangyaung fields; but they are situated at a distance of a mile and a-half to the east of that place, and neither of the two villages where the oil is actually found is marked on the large map of Burma. Besides, there are no hills in that part of the country, which is a tolerably level and flat plateau rising on an average about 260 feet above the Irrawaddy. The country is, however, intersected by long irregular ravines, which make it very difficult to cross, while in some parts communication by cart is utterly impracticable. The daily outturn of the 281 wells at present in work is 14,932 viss, a viss being 365 lbs. Mr. Noetling's opinion is that the future of the oil fields depends on the style of working and on geological conditions, and, as the Burmese cannot sink their wells below 310 feet, and most of the limited space is now filled with wells, he considers that the industry as at present worked will soon come to an end. But, with European supervision and the introduction of improved boring machinery, there is every reason to believe that all this will be changed, and that the oil industry will develop, and will rank among the most important minerals industries of Burma. All ideas of competing with American or Russian oil are strongly deprecated, as being only too likely to prove utterly illusory, and too exalted ideas of their productive powers should not be entertained.

THE INDIAN WHEAT TRADE.

(Pioneer.)

The Bombay Chamber of Commerce has throughout taken a leading part in urging the reform of the Indian wheat trade, and its efforts cannot be too warmly recognised; but its latest deliverance on the subject is scarcely convincing. The "objection to improvement," we are told, "comes only from a minority of middlemen; and it is not surprising if the character of this obstruction should have given rise in some quarters to suggestions of legislative interference. These suggestions, however, the Chamber has never countenanced."

Digitized by Google

At the same time, the only reason for the Chamber's attitude in this respect is said to be that "it is not advisable to force sudden and radical changes on the trade, but let improvement come in the trade of itself, taking it for granted that merchants, sellers, buyers, shippers, and consumers are too keenly alive to their interests to let any opportunity for improvement in their trade pass by." We are the first to deprecate legislative interference in the wheat trade or anywhere else when it is not absolutely necessary; but why, if the minority interested in sophistication be so small, should the wheat traders object to any change, however sudden, in the direction of improvement? It is all very well to speak of letting improvement "come in the trade of itself"; but the argument is exceedingly elastic—it might be urged against the Merchandise Marks Act, or indeed against any Adulteration Act—and the interests of the commerce of a country as a whole put a limit to the period of its validity. In another column will be found some extracts from an interesting paper read by Mr. John McDougall before the Society of Arts, which supply abundant grounds for this conclusion. He tells us that in one of the wheat districts of the Punjab alone there are ten or eleven villages whose sole employment is to mix differently coloured earth to suit the colour and size of the different sorts of wheat, their employers being the conveying traders—that is, the men who buy from the cultivators to sell to the agents of the shippers, and who, Mr. McDougall asserts, resort to these practices of self-protection against the shippers' tricks. Side by side with this take the statement that Indian wheat is much superior both to Russian and American as a flour produce could it only be procured clean, and we can see what a hindrance to the credit of our grain and the development of our agriculture and trade is the continuance of the present system. If the Chamber of Commerce do not want legislation, the sooner they set about coercing the "small minority" which exercises so extraordinary an influence the better.

THE TEA TRADE IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Times.)

We have no doubt that before long, now that Indian tea growers are turning their attention to local wants and supplying good tea in small packets at three pice each, that the local consumption will largely increase. It takes a considerable time to oust a trade which has long existed, and poor tea consumers in India and Burma have used Chinese tea obtainable in small packets for so many years that they cannot be expected all at once to take to Indian teas, which have been only so obtainable within the last year or two. We have no doubt the public health would improve if tea was more generally drank in India. The healthy condition generally of the Chinese in Burma, and their comparative immunity from fever, may be put down to their constant use of weak tea as a drink, rather than cold water. The Burmese are great tea-drinkers too, but have not, until recently, been able to get Indian tea in small packets, and have therefore generally bought the cheap Chinese variety which is carried in small packets by pedlars all over the country. Now that Natives of India have opened shops in most of the principal towns of Upper and Lower Burma Indian tea growers should have less difficulty in getting their brands into the markets here than hitherto.

LANGUAGE EXAMINATIONS.

It is almost universally admitted that the present system of examinations in the Native languages, especially for military officers, is by no means satisfactory. Although something has been done of late years to make the lower examinations more of a test, and less of a farce, than they formerly were, yet great changes will have to be made before these examinations will fulfil the object for which they are, or ought to be, intended. One meets every day young officers who have recently passed the H.S., but are unable to speak two sentences correctly, or to understand the simplest report made by a sepoy. The first question that presents itself is, "What is the object of the H.S. Examination?" Probationers for the Staff Corps would probably reply that the H.S. Examination was instituted in order that they should not get into mischief when they first joined a Native regiment, and to enable them to get six months' leave to Bombay or Poona when they happen to be serving in an unpleasant station. There is no doubt, however, that it is really intended to ensure officers possessing a good colloquial knowledge of the language, together with sufficient acquaintance with the written and printed characters to enable them to read a fairly easy letter in the Urdu and Hindi characters. Under the present system, however, the greatest stress is laid on the least important parts of the examination. In every regiment there are plenty of sepoys and N.C.O.'s capable of translating well from English into Hindustani, and after once passing the examination an officer is never required to write a letter in the latter language with his own hand. Yet the translation from English into Hindustani is the part of the examination which is considered of the greatest importance, and which is the stumbling-block of the great majority of unsuccesful candidates. On the other hand, there are few Natives in any regiment that are able to make an intelligible translation into English, and an officer may often be called upon to translate a paper read by a Native from Hindustani into English. In the H.S. Examination, however, this is entirely ignored. By all means let an officer be able to dictate a letter in Hindustani, and anyone knowing the language well, colloquially, should be competent to do this. So much stress need not be laid on written translations into the language, while, on the other hand, more attention should be paid to translation into English and to the colloquial. The lower standard might be abolished, as being of no practical value even as an inducement to study the language; and the degree of honour, if considered necessary to retain it, might be left as it now stands. By this means a better practical knowledge of the language would be secured, and young officers would not be obliged to waste so much time in learning phrases and expression, which on this side of India are only used by Munshis and in books, and which they invariably forget a few months after having passed the examination.

THE PARSEES AND MR. OMMANEY.

(Times of India.)

What can the Parsee community have done to Mr. Ommaney that he should give them such a brutal and uncalled for slap in the face as appeared on Thursday morning in the most prominent position in the Bombay Gazette? From this precious communication it would seem that Mr. Ommaney declares that "the whole Parsee community, from Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy to Mr. Merwanjee, pleader," not only actively sympathised with Mr. Arthur Crawford, but were throughout strongly opposed to the action of Government, and were, every man Jack of them, from "Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy to Mr. Merwanjee, pleader," either "passive or active obstructionists." The whole community, it would seem, did "much dirty work." And then comes the worst part of Mr. Ommaney's extraordinary indictment. Mr. Ommaney, we are told, "further states that the Parsees have no claim to superior morality. They, like Brahmins, low-castes, and Mussulmans, are all interested in asking for an inquiry." This reads like the nonsense it is, and we confess ourselves unable to make head or tail of it. What inquiry? And why should they not be interested in an inquiry if they want it? Surely there is nothing criminal or "dirty" or "low caste" or "obstructionist" in that. However, Mr. Ommaney's charges—that is, if he ever made them—are simply rubbish. The Parsee community, from Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy to Mr. Merwanjee downwards, had as little to do with the Crawford case as Her Majesty's household at Balmoral. The Deccan is not a Parsee habitat. That wonderful conspiracy of which we have heard so much and seen so little has hitherto been known as the "Brahmin conspiracy," and there is this to say for it—the Brahmins were on the spot, whereas the Parsees were not. "The Brahmin conspiracy," if we can believe our contemporary's version of what Mr. Ommaney says, is now to be known as the "Parsee conspiracy," and there is just about as much or as little truth in the one phrase as the other. The oddest part of the whole affair is that Mr. Ommaney is supposed to have written these malicious and ill-natured and uncalled-for remarks in India, and to have forwarded them to England by post, from which they are now returned to us in a London telegram, after having been laid on the table of the House of Commons. We should recommend "the whole Parsee community, from Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy to Mr. Merwanjee," to call upon Mr. Ommaney for an instant explanation of what he means by this wholesale and most wanton and unprovoked attack. If this gross libel has really been laid upon the table of the House of Commons, it must have been forwarded through the Bombay Government; and if Mr. Ommaney does not give a sufficient explanation, or contradiction, of what he is alleged to have written, or if necessary a formal apology, a remonstrance should be sent direct to Lord Reay himself as the head of the Government, and he should be asked to see that the obnoxious document is withdrawn.

THE SAME.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Parsees not inexcusably take indignant exception to the somewhat sweeping statement which, as we stated yesterday, in substance charged that community, from its titular head down to the Times of India, with giving their sympathy to Mr. Crawford, and either actively or passively obstructing the inquiry instituted by Government. This presentment of the case cannot be regarded wholly at variance with historic verity. Undoubtedly, from whatever cause, the Parsees generally appeared to take a degree of interest in Mr. Crawford, which certainly was not accorded to any other member of the official hierarchy. This fidelity to old friendship was certainly not hidden under a bushel last year. Free utterance was given to the prevailing feeling in his favour in many of the newspapers edited or influenced by that versatile and enterprising race, though there were some notable exceptions. There was nothing to be ashamed of in this; whatever aspect it may have presented to Mr. Ommaney and his coadjutors, it was creditable to the community that it displayed a certain degree of independence, however inconvenient may have been some of its manifestations. Before pronouncing any judgment on the allegation that there was active or passive obstruction to inquiry, we shall wait to see the full text of the official Note. We shall then be able to estimate the force of the complaint, if complaint it be, rather than an intimation of an impression made on the mind of the Inspector-General when engaged on a very arduous duty. But there seems no reason to withhold an expression of regret that in appearing to include Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy amongst those who allowed personal sympathy with Mr. Crawford to operate in the direction of active or passive obstruction to the inquiry ordered by Government an injustice should have been committed. Sir Jamsetjee, when Mr. Crawford was brought back from Bombay and was temporarily staying in Colonel Portman's bungalow, not far from Sir Jamsetjee's residence, was informed by the Colonel that large bail was required, and asked whether he would become security for a sum of Rs. 25,000 This request, made on behalf of one who was an old friend, could not be disregarded; Sir Jamsetjee became security for Rs. 5,000 and induced his immediate friends and neighbours to subscribe for the rest. Beyond this act of kindness, Sir Jamsetjee in no way manifested bias of any kind. The very harmless allegation that Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy sympathised with Mr. Crawford was, no doubt, well founded; but it cannot be said, and ought not to be implied, that he in any way obstructed the Government inquiry; the imputation of sympathy plus obstruction is applicable to the Times of India, which out-heroded Sathe in sustained, if for the most part unavailing, efforts to render inquiry abortive. Whether and how far Mr. Ommaney's allegation applies to the majority, or even to a minority, of the Parsee community, we cannot judge with equal confidence, until we have read his official note.

THE ATTACK ON THE PARSEES.

The following is the particular passage in Mr. Ommaney's Memorandum that refers to the Parsee community. Mr. Ommaney writes (and under date Feb. 25th, 1889):—

Before concluding this narrative of the inquiry, I think it will be as well to say a few words in further explanation of the opposition that I have referred to in various places. It must, in the first place, be clearly understood that the whole of the Parsee community, which includes all the people who know most about Mr. Crawford's financial arrangements, were in the opposition. From Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy down to Merwanjee, pleader and the proprietors of the Deccan Herald every Parsee was a passive or active obstructionist. Mr. Nowrojee, the mail contractor, alone afforded me every facility for the examination of his books. I had occasion to make inquiries of Mr. Eduljee, a wealthy merchant of Kurrachee, who lives in Poona for his health, about a promissory note that had been sold to him by Mr. Spiers in connection with the Sawant case. Mr. Eduljee left me promising to let me know the date of the transaction—a very important point—but I received a letter from him regretting he could not tell me the date more exactly than that it was within a certain six months. The note was one for Rs. 2,000, and carried interest, and I say frankly I do not believe Mr. Eduljee was unable to trace the date of the transaction. I tried to get a footing among the class through a Parsee police inspector who was by me at the time, and I attribute my failure to something more than the inspector's stupidity. I do not think it necessary to go into further detail on this subject; but it deserves mention, lest the Parsees, who have succeeded in preventing themselves being mixed up with Mr. Crawford, should get credit, which they most certainly do not deserve, for superior morality.

The active obstructionists among the Parsees, as far as I can discover, were Merwanjee, pleader and the proprietors of the Deccan Herald. They were hand and glove in a great deal of the dirty work of Mr. Crawford's defence. From the 22nd July I kept up a watch on Mr. Crawford's visitors, and Merwanjee was constantly there. The unfair attitude of the paper referred to, with its false and garbled reports and news, is sufficiently notorious.

Mr. Sitaram Hari Chiplunkar, the Secretary of the Poona Sarvajanik Sabha, and proprietor and editor of the Duyan Prakash, was another active adherent of Mr. Crawford. The first open attempt to intimidate witnesses was made in the columns of the paper at the beginning of Hanmantrao's trial, and the efforts have been steadily sustained in this and other newspapers as well up to the present day. He would argue in private that whatever Mr. Crawford's methods may be his official acts have encouraged the aspirations of the people, and procured for them substantial benefits, and the present exposures must damage the reputation of the people of India.

BENGAL.

(July 16.)

A SUCCESSOR to Sir Comer Petheram as Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University has not yet been nominated. Mr. Scoble was offered the Vice-Chancellorship, but declined on the ground that the working head of the University should be a permanent resident in Calcutta.

WE regret to have to announce the death of Dr. James Laing, one of the medical officers attached to the Coolie Emigration Service. He died on Friday afternoon from cerebral hæmorrhage. Dr. Laing was for many years employed in looking after the welfare of coolies between Calcutta and the West Indian ports, and a few months ago, under the auspices of the Colonial Office, issued a most useful handbook for the use of surgeons-superintendent in charge of coolie vessels. Dr. Laing had only arrived from England a few days ago, and was to leave in the emigrant ship Grecian.—Englishman.

THE CALCUTTA SCHOOL OF ARMS.—The first meeting of the members of the recently-started School of Arms, which was postponed on Monday evening on account of the races, was held last night, at 171, Dhurrumtollah-street. The meeting was called for nine o'clock, but at that hour only a few members turned up. Later on, however, many more came in, and by the time the meeting commenced, over a dozen gentlemen were present. There are already about twenty members of the club, and the large and splendid hall, which has been specially fitted, can accommodate thrice that number, while all necessary appurtenances, parallel balls, trapeze, dumb-bells, gloves, &c., are liberally provided. Two rooms, one of which is fitted up as a lavatory, will add greatly to the convenience of the members. The indefatigable and ever genial Captain Horace Hayes was present, and with Professor Smith and a military gymnastic instructor from the army, went through several "exercises" with some of the members before the business meeting, which commenced at a little after ten o'clock. At this meeting a committee, consisting of Captain Hayes and Messrs. A. Apcar, Rees, Parker, and Turnbull (secretary), with power to add to their number, was formed. The subject of drawing up certain rules was next discussed, and the following rules were finally agreed upon, it being understood that the committee will submit further rules to a general meeting for their approval:—(1) That the name of this club shall be the School of Arms; (2) the objects of the club are as stated in the circular already issued; (3) any gentleman wishing to join the club will kindly send in his name and the name of his proposer to the secretary, who will submit it to the committee; (4) the entrance fee shall be Rs. 15, and the monthly subscription Rs. 5, payable in advance; (5) the hours of meeting are fixed at 6.30 to 8.30 in the morning and from 6 to 7 in the evening, according to the time of the year. Thus has been successfully started in Calcutta a School of Arms, with buildings and necessary appurtenances all complete. The military gymnasium instructor will probably attend twice a day on all days of the week, except Fridays and Sundays, and we have no doubt that these facts have only to be sufficiently well known to make the club widely appreciated.—Indian Daily News.

MADRAS.

THE Freemasons at Bangalore are making preparations to welcome Lord Connemara as the District Grand Master. His Lordship goes there for the races and stays during the season.

THE Government of Madras have informed the Government of India that the earthwork of the proposed East Coast Railway, which was to have been put in hand at once as a relief work in the Ganjam district, does not require to be started for the present.

THE loss of human life from wild animals and snake-bite in Madras last year was altogether 1,642, being an increase of 151 over 1887. The increase was, however, entirely due to snake-bites, as there was a decrease of 41 in the number killed by wild animals. There was also a large increase in the number of cattle killed, the total number being 10,096. Tigers cause most loss of life among human beings, but the panthers and leopards caused much the most destruction among animals. On the other hand, there was a large decrease in the number of wild animals killed, with the exception of tigers and leopards, while there was an increase in the sums paid as rewards. This is accounted for by the fact that full, instead of half, rates were paid for cubs, and by certain special rates sanctioned for tigers in the Vizagapatam district.

BOMBAY.

(July 16.)

LIEUT. C. H. PRITCHARD, S.C., Wing Officer and Quartermaster, 9th Bombay Infantry, has been granted leave out of India for 182 days.

LIEUT. P. A. N. ST. L. WOOD, S.C., Wing Officer, 7th Bombay Infantry, has been granted furlough to Europe for one year.

MR. B. ROBERTSON, C.S., Assistant Collector, Kaira, has been allowed privilege leave of absence for three months.

MAJOR W. I. LE BRETON, Staff Corps, has been permitted to retire from the Service from the 5th ult. on a pension of £365 per annum, payable in Europe.

MR. H. C. MULES acts as Deputy Commissioner, District Magistrate, and District Registrar, Upper Sind Frontier District, during the absence of Mr. R. Giles on privilege leave, or pending further orders.

A MEETING of the Agri-horticultural Society was held at Poona on the 8th inst., when it was decided to hold a show in the middle of September. It was also resolved to re-introduce the vegetable and fruit department of the show.

THE Zenana Mission Fancy Fair, in aid of the Mission Girls' School and Women's Medical Mission was held at Poona on the 9th inst. Lord and Lady Reay and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught were present and evinced much interest. The sales were good.

LIEUT. A. FORDYCE, 3rd Bombay Light Infantry, has been appointed to be in charge of the office of Assistant Political Resident at Zaila, with effect from the date on which he received charge of that office until further orders.

THE Deccan Times mentions that the agent of the Deccan Mining Company has succeeded in making an agreement with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway for supplying fifty thousand tons of the Singareni coal for use on that railway.

ACCORDING to the Indian Planters' Gazette, the Bombay Government is like the lost sheep of the General Confession who are always leaving undone what they ought to do, and doing what they ought not to do. Its latest aberration from the path of duty is the withdrawal of the usual grant to the Poona Horse Show. When this was first inaugurated the Government gave Rs. 5,000 annually, but afterwards reduced it to Rs. 3,500. This year it has declined to give anything at all. The public subscriptions amount to only about Rs. 2,000, out of which Rs. 1,000 is expended in raising the temporary sheds used for the accommodation of the horses, leaving only Rs. 1,000 for prizes. We understand that the committee contemplate making an appeal to Government, asking it to reconsider its decision and to make the usual grant. Should the appeal be unsuccessful, the idea of holding the annual Horse Show in the capital of the Deccan will most probably have to be abandoned, for this year at least, and possibly for ever.

BURMA.

MR. T. D. JAMESON, who had been in the Burma Police since 1865, and who had been officiating as Inspector-General of Police during General Stedman's absence on short leave, died at Rangoon on the 2nd instant through the bursting of a blood-vessel. The deceased had been laid up only three days. He was much liked by his subordinates, and was a general favourite everywhere in consequence of his genial and unassuming ways.

MR. POCKETT, Inspector of Police at Yetago, in the Pokoko district, very cleverly captured Boh Toke at Myingyan on the 1st instant. This is the man recently referred to in a telegram as one of the few dacoit leaders still wanted in this part of the country. The Boh was betrayed by his own brother, who informed Mr. Pockett that he was quietly hiding at Myingyan, where he thought to escape detection. There is a reward of Rs. 500 on his head. On receiving the information Mr. Pockett immediately went across to Myingyan, and arrested the offender.

The Phunkan Tsawbwa, against whom our troops were operating the other day, has paid up the last rupee of the fine inflicted upon him; and the Kachin Chief who was retained at Bhamo as hostage for the payment has consequently been released. The effect of last season's operations in the North is now beginning to be seen in the revival of trade. Quite recently jade stone to the value of Rs. 20,000 and about 10,000 viss weight of india-rubber arrived at Bhamo from Mogoung within the space of three or four days.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE DISTRESSES OF INDIA.

The following article, translated from the Nazm Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 20th May, shows how the teachings of the Bengali Press are coming to be imitated in cruder form by the Vernacular journals of Upper India:—

"How unlucky is India: how hard is her life! Her property has been robbed, her chattels sold, and her crown and throne wrested from her. She has neither her former grandeur nor pomp; neither her former courage nor enthusiasm; neither her former wisdom nor intelligence. The goddess of riches has disappeared and food has become poison (lit.—sting). She has neither a sword nor a shield, neither a bow nor an arrow. Good luck has deserted her, and she has no reason or sense left in her. She has no world-conquering army, nor is she respected and honoured, but she is treated with contempt. She has neither her former rank nor position; neither her former prestige nor good luck; neither territory nor wealth; neither her former ease, nor comfort. Her happy days are gone. She has neither her former bottle of liquor nor cup; neither her former happy mornings nor evenings; neither her former game nor trap; neither her former modesty nor fame. Misfortunes have befallen her, and she is overwhelmed with grief. She has been reduced to an abject poverty, having not even a shell left with her. Persistent rumours are afloat to the effect that she will be deprived of what is still left in her possession. The scarcity of grain, which is the cause of distress and misery, which is the grandmother of Dajjal's donkey, and which is an equal of the Angel of Death, has become a deadly enemy to her. Although she is very poor and afflicted by famine, grain is being sent to Europe, which is the crown or lord of the earth. She who grows grain and is loyal to the core has to starve every day, and her grief is not alleviated. The fat and the pot-bellied, who desire to deprive the poor even of their loin cloths, who enjoy themselves day and night, who have the power to supply wants, who receive large salaries, and who can fathom even the ocean, do not care for her, and eat up all the grain. They do not sympathise with the distressed people who are exposed to new calamities every day. She is afflicted by famine every year. The tax or taxation is another cause of trouble and distraction to her. Her heart has become a sieve with grief. She is depressed with sorrow, and she has neither wealth nor property. They have taken from her by force all she possessed, and have shown or taught her a new method. They have seized the riches of Qarun, and have not spared even the treasures buried underground. Sometimes a feast has to be given to the Viceroy, sometimes a war is declared against Burma and sometimes against Kabul. Sometimes aid is given to Englishmen, and sometimes military preparations are made. In this way all the money she had earned has passed by ill-luck into the hands of others, and she has become penniless. My God, protect me! What does this rage or severity mean? If God extends no helping hand, what can Government do? The black sky is not a friend: the friends have become strangers or enemies. They foment strife or sedition, and are cheats and great tyrants. They have made both the rich and the poor quite helpless. They are tutors to Halaku (i.e, worse than Halaku), and are executioners Injustice is always practised and new forms of tyranny are devised. Although they have placed us in a cage, they call us free. This is their justice and this their order. No complaints are heard. If even a sigh is uttered, a complaint made or justice asked for, increased tyranny is exercised, patrons become ill-wishers, severe misfortunes come, yes—and, no; speaking regiments of sorrow advance, drunk and with eyes wide open. . . . How long should Ufaq cry? He cannot cry any more, as his tongue is tied. He believes that even if a man died nobody would care for him."

LOYALTY OF THE INDIAN PRINCES AND PEOPLE.

(Rast Goftar.)

Sir Lepel Griffin is nothing if not outspoken. He is cocksure himself of everything he says, and the meaning of what he says can never be mistaken. Reuter sends a pretty full summary of a paper read by Sir Lepel at the Colonial Institute on the relations existing between the Native princes of India and the British Government. It appears from the telegram that the paper must be very interesting, and we shall anxiously await the receipt of the full text, in order to see how he has supported his conclusions on the subject of the loyalty of the Indian Princes and people. Loyalty there is, undoubtedly, resting as it does on the sure foundation of self-interest—sure, that is so long as the motive endures. The princes and people of India would be mad if they were not loyal in this sense to a power which alone would be able to maintain peace in the country and keep a host of hostile interests from clashing. On the other hand, it is idle to expect them to be loyal to an alien rule from sentiment, for that would be little short of a miracle. As for most of them, it is not an extravagant supposition that they would strike a blow, if they thought they could advance their interest by so doing. The States are loyal in the sense we have indicated, and we think it was not generally known until the lecturer informed the world of "the popular idea" that they were fretting to reconquer their lost autonomy. If there is such a popular idea anywhere it certainly does not exist in India, and we should be greatly surprised, if it exists, to any extent, in England.

OBITUARY.

SIR GEORGE RUSSELL CLERK.

Sir George Rusell Clerk, K.C.B., G.C.S.I., whose death occuared on the 25th ult., at his residence, 33, Elm-park-gardens, S.W., was the oldest son of Mr. John Clerk, of Worting House, Hampshire, by the daughter ahd co-heir of Mr. Carew Mildmay, of Shawford House, in the same county. He was born at Worting House in 1800, and educated at Haileybury College, and he entered the service of the East India Company in 1818. In 1830 he was made Political Agent on the Bengal frontier, and he became in succession Bristish Envoy at Lahore, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, and Governor of Bombay. This last office he resigned in 1847. Returning to England he was created a K.C.B. in 1848, and was offered the Governship of the Cape of Good Hope, which he declined, though he undertook the duties of a Commissioner for settling the boundary question then in dispute in the colony. In 1856 he was nominated Permanent Under-Secretary to the India Board, on the reconstruction of our Indian Administration, and in 1858 he became Under-Secretary of State for India. In April, 1860, he was again nominated to the Governorship of Bombay, but he resigned in consequence of ill-health in 1861, and was appointed a member of Her Majesty's Indian Council in December, 1863. He held the latter appointment until 1876. On the establishment of the Order of the Star of India in 1861 he was one of the first created Knights of the Order, and on its extension in 1866 he was nominated a Knight Grand Cross. Sir George Clerk married, in 1632, the widow of Colonel Stewart. She died in 1878.

Captain Rawlinson, A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief will probably proceed to England in October.

According to Dr. J. R. Wallace, Calcutta men are in a parlous state—at any rate, from a temperance point of view. They drink in an appalling way, as many as ten separate and distinct "pegs" vanishing under their influence per diem. The gruesome catalogue of these libations, pace Dr. Wallace, begins at 7 A.M. with an Eye-opener. At eight o'clock, after chota hazri, he takes a Steadier; at nine an Appetiser; at eleven (at the office, this) a Strenghtener; at two a Tiffiner; at four a Refresher; (after these arduous precedent duties he surely needs one) at six a Tenniser; at eight (he is home again, now), a Digester; at nine a Composer; and at ten an Eye-closer. "And next morning at seven o'clock the half-opened eye wanders in search of the bottle as before." Most ungallantly in his sweeping indictment the doctor includes also ladies. Had it not been for this indiscretion we would have concealed the fact that his fearful catalogue of drinks is cribbed from an American paper. Since Dr. Wallace's lecture exchange has gone down one-sixteenth.

Where, asks the Pioneer, is the line to be drawn in the matter of medals for service in Burma and elsewhere? The troops now serving across the Bay of Bengal are not eligible for the Indian medal which was given to those who shared in General Prendergast's expedition and in the operations which were afterwards undertaken to pacify the country, and yet the handful of men in the Chin Hills, for example have seen some fighting, and are even now in actual conflict with the tribesmen. In the ensuing cold weather there will be columns traversing the Lushai country both from the Indian and Burmese frontiers, and the expedition will be as much on the regulation pattern as that into the Sikkim Hills. The troops which will move from Upper Burma will, of course, get the medal if it is granted for "Lushai," but those who do not actually share in the operations across the frontier will not be eligible for it, though they may render useful service in rear. There must of course be a limit set to the issue of medals, but it should not be too narrow, for after all there is no great expense involved as compared with the grant of batta, and nothing pleases the soldier more than "another bit of ribbon." Perhaps when the Lushai country has been opened out and the whole country westwards from the boundaries of China and Siam to Assam and Eastern Bengal has become British territory the question of finality in the granting of the medal may be reconsidered.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE AGITATION.

A meeting of the Uncovenanted Services was held in the Town Hall, Simla, July 10, and was well attended by all branches of the services. The old committee was re-elected, and the places of those who had retired were filled. The recent debate in Parliament was discussed, and a resolution was passed to the effect that the progress made by the agitation was very satisfactory, and that it should be continued. The meeting adopted with slight alterations a reply to Sir John Gorst's speech, which had been prepared by the committee, and desired that it should be widely circulated. It was determined that the communication from the home association should be awaited before any definite line of action was determined upon. A vote of thanks to Sir Roper Lethbridge and other members of Parliament was passed.

The following are the heads of the reply to Sir John Gorst's speech on the subject of pensions. Taking the first argument, that the Indian tax-payer cannot be justly called upon to make good any deficiency caused by the fall in the rupee, it is shown that in three distinct cases the tax-payer is called upon to make good similar deficiencies in the case of pensions and salaries of the India Office, in the case of increased pensions to Royal Engineers, and in the case of that portion of the pensions of Covenanted Civilians which is subscribed for by a deduction from their salaries. Referring to the possible benefits suggested by Sir John Gorst as likely to result from the Public Service Commission, it is shown how shadowy and uncertain such suggestions are. The argument that the Services had no right to appeal to Parliament is analysed and completely refuted. Referring to the challenge to go to law, it is replied that the varying forms of contracts and the entire absence of written agreements in some cases make it impossible that any one test case could bind the Government to the equitable adjustment of all reasonable claims.

A rumour, which lacks confirmation, has reached Calcutta of the death of Rana Bhere Shumshere Bahadoor, Prime Minister of Nepaul. Bhere Shumshere's death might lead to important changes in Nepaul.

A new invention to permit of target practice being carried out in barrack rooms, &c., has recently been brought under the notice of the Commander-in-Chief, and has met with his Excellency's approval. It consists of a hollow rifled steel cartridge so contrived as to fire a small pellet by the explosion of a percussion cap. No subsidiary apparatus is required; the pellet does not touch the rifle barrel in its passage, and every soldier is thus enabled to practice with his own weapon. This invention is designated "Dreyse's steel cartridges" for barrack room practice, and the sole agent for India is Mr. R. Hotz, Simla, from whom cartridges, caps, and pellets can be obtained.

Charles Lamb divides the human race into those who borrow and those who lend. Among the former were to be classed, until the introduction of the Debtors Act into their country, a large percentage of Burmese women, whose joyous temperament is scarcely equalled by their forethought. As, however, they can no longer be arrested under the Act, the lenders are beginning to fight shy, or else the attachable property possessed by a female Burmese borrower must be microscopically small, for they are no longer found in the same number as defendants in the Small Cause Courts. This might, of course, be explained by supposing that they were in process of transition to the army of lenders; but the Judges of the various Courts do not incline to this opinion, and they are probably right. The Debtors Act is not popular among the Burmese ladies.

The Lushai correspondence is very satisfactory a ling. All the objects of the expedition, it seems, have been fully accomplished, and Colonel Tregear and the officers and men under his command are officially thanked for the excellent manner in which the work has been done. Howsata and Jahoota have been duly punished for the murder of Lieutenant Stewart; the road from Demagiri towards the Shendu country has been constructed, and an advanced post has been established and garrisoned. This stockade, which is situated at Lungleh, has accommodation for two hundred men, and there is a plentiful supply of water. The details of the expedition seem to have been attended to with great care, and Colonel Tregear, while warmly commending the forces all round, singles out for especial mention the names of Mr. D. R. Dyall, political officer with the force, and eleven officers and officials. Although a severe lesson has been taught the disaffected hill tribes, it is not impossible that operations will be resumed in the coming winter, and in that event the forces will find that the whole ground has been cleared for action. The Times of India doubts, however, if there will be any serious outbreak, for the tribes have long since manifested a desire to come to terms.

WEDDING AT CUTCH (BHUJ).

On Saturday, the 6th July, a very pretty wedding took place at St. Andrew's Church, Cutch (Bhuj), the bride being Grace Alexa, daughter of Colonel Hunter, C.B., C.S.I., Political Agent, Cutch, and the bridegroom Surgon-Major T. E. Ferguson, M.B., I.M.D., in charge of the 14th Bombay Infantry. The Rev. W. E. Scott, B.A., officiated, and Lieut. Wilkins acted as best man. The church was prettily decorated with palms and white flowers, and the regimental colours were placed at the entrance of the porch. The road from the Residency to the church presented a most picturesque sight, being lined by the mounted police of H.H. the Rao of Cutch and by the 14th Bombay Infantry. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a lovely dress of cream faille silk, with a long square train; front of skirt and bodice prettily draped with crêpe de chine, high Medici collar, and revers of silk. She wore a half-wreath of orange blossoms, jasmine, and myrtle, sprays of the same on the bodice, and a long tulle veil, fastened with pearl pins. Her ornaments were a pearl necklace and pendant, the gift of the bridegroom, and she carried a bouquet of white flowers. The bridesmaid in attendance was Miss Moyle, who wore a myrtle green directoire costume trimmed with crimson silk, large hat to match, and carried a bouquet of white flowers tied with crimson ribbon. She also wore a gold and pearl brooch, the gift of the bridegroom. After the ceremony, the regimental band, which was stationed outside the church, played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," and the bridal party adjourned to the Residency, preceded by the bride and bridegroom, who drove away in a four-in-hand, with an escort of mounted police. After the usual congratulations and inspection of presents, the health of the happy pair was proposed by H.H. the Rao of Cutch in appropriate terms, and Colonel Strong, 14th Bombay Infantry, added a few words to the bride of congratulation, on her becoming the wife of an officer of the regiment. The bride and bridegroom drove away for their honeymoon, in a shower of rice, and amidst the hearty cheers of those present.

THE SOLDIERS' BEER.

The following letter appears in the Bombay Gazette:—

SIR,—In your issue of the 5th inst., appeared a letter signed "Walter G. Treacher" under the sensational heading of "Is a soldier's life worth living," sympathising with poor T.A. at being forced to drink country brewed beer when he can get something far superior from Mr. Treacher. What a disinterested champion T.A. has found at last! "Remember Short's your friend, not Codlin." In the event of a rise in the price of material, or an increase in freight and insurance from disturbances in Europe, would Mr. Treacher be still so anxious to supply McEwen's beers? I fancy his customers then would be only too glad to get country brewed beers. Mr. Treacher is also not at all anxious to supply stations up-country, such as Dalhousie or Dharamsala in the Punjab. He likes an order in Bombay with no risk and no responsibilities. Would it suit him as well to supply under contract on the same terms as the Indian brewer, first deposit a large cash security, and keep up stores with agents at each station of supply with several months' stock, and then to depend on a most critical tasting committee to pass his beer. I fancy he would find McEwen's beers were not quite as much appreciated as he now tries to make out. As a matter of fact the contracts for supply of beer in India are open to McEwen and every other brewer in the United Kingdom, but the terms simply do not suit them. With regard to quality, we can at all times compete successfully with any of the home brewers shipping beers for canteen use.—Yours, &c.,

H. G. MEAKIN.

THE death is announced of Mr. Max Goldmann. He entered the Post Office Department in September, 1877. In 1879 he was placed on special duty in the office of Director-General. In 1881 he from choice was appointed Postmaster, Aden, and was there till January, 1887, when he was appointed Assistant Comptroller, which appointment he held till his death. During the time he was Postmaster at Aden, he was selected by Mr. H. E. M. James, Director-General, to accompany him as his Secretary at the Postal Conference held at Lisbon in 1885. He was especially deputed to Zanzibar to report upon postal arrangements in August, 1885. He was very popular with the delegates of the Governments at the Lisbon Conference, and became warm friends with some of them. Mr. Goldmann was an officer of much ability, and had every prospect of rising by it in the Department. He was beloved by his subordinates for the kind, considerate, and patient manner of behaving to them, and they much regret his loss. He was a most reliable official, and his death is much regretted by the Director-General and brother officers. He was a true friend

SHOOTING IN THE DUN.

The Allahabad paper would have some protection for the Dun. It says:—

When the Central Provinces Government the other day imposed a scale of fees upon shooting in Government forest reserves the money to be thereby obtained was probably the least of their considerations. It is doubtful if all the licenses taken out by all the sportsmen who visit the Provinces will cover the extra expense to the Forest Department of seeing that the rules are observed. But the principle asserted in those rules (and vainly combated in Bombay) that the Government is the owner of the animals in its forests, and the fish in the streams thereof, has been carried many steps further as to its practical application by Mr. F. Baker in the lately published report upon the Settlement of the Dun. The Dun, as everyone knows, is the favourite shooting ground of Upper India. Climate, scenery, and up till quite lately the abundance and variety of the game made it a veritable sportsman's paradise. But from the revenue officer's point of view it is the worst district in these Provinces. Even under the new settlement the Eastern Dun is assessed only at £800, the rent, as Mr. Baker says, "of a fairly good small-sized grouse moor," while "the whole land revenue of the Dun several times over would not pay for the lease of a first-class Scotch deer forest or for fishing on a single Scotch river." This comparison will indicate of itself what Mr. Baker's proposals are. Holding that the revenue cannot be expected to increase except with the very gradual increase of cultivation, and that it is undesirable that cultivation should increase to any great extent at the expense of the forests—since that would mean a decrease in the all important water-supply which the Ganges brings down to the plains—he thinks that the Government should face the situation and lease out the shooting and fishing rights by auction to the highest bidder. The State would certainly be the gainer: and this is not the only consideration in favour of the proposal.

The game all over India has been decreasing fast of late years: but nowhere has the process gone on so rapidly as in the Dun. The presence of a considerable European community, its vicinity to several large stations, and the permanent cantonment of a Goorkha regiment in its midst have made it heavy odds against the game, and in the absence of any restrictions it is only marvellous that any should have survived the indiscriminate slaughter going on at all times except just in the height of the monsoon. Yakub Khan, for instance, the ex-Amir, notoriously did nothing but shoot when he first went there, and shot everything he saw, without regard to sex or age: and with such an example before them it was not likely that others should forbear. As Mr. Baker says, "No one sees any advantage in exercising moderation for the benefit of those who come after him," so "the principle generally acted on is to let nothing escape if possible. I have heard of 20 sambhar stags being shot by a single sportsman in a week, and 70 or 80 chital stags in a fortnight not many years ago. Peafowl were shot by the cartload where hardly one can now be seen." From the sportsman's point of view it is now a simple question between preservation and extermination: and if preservation, the most effectual means as well as the most profitable to Government would be the letting out of sporting rights to private persons. For the first few years the prices forthcoming might not be high, but as soon as the game began to recover and the system began to be appreciated in England, one cannot doubt that many of the rich men who live to shoot would be only too glad to find a means for employing the spring months in their favourite pursuit, and that an Indian jungle might become as fashionable and by force of competition as expensive as a Scotch forest. From the point of the public here it would not be agreeable to see a plutocracy stepping in between the Indian sportsman and his pleasure: and a system of licenses like that of the Central Provinces might seem to meet the case. But the English shooting tenant, if he really took to the idea, would bring so much more money to the country (as look what he has done for the once worthless Highlands) that the Government would not be justified in hesitating between the two systems.

THE Sahachar states that a curious marriage ceremony took place at Bamundangah, near Jonai, Hughli district, a few days ago, a baby, eight months old, of the Brahmin caste, being married to a Charitri Brahmin, twenty-eight years old. The father of the bride gave the bridegroom a present of Rs. 200 in cash for marrying his daughter.

A MODERN Fagin has been unearthed at Bombay. This gentleman, by name Abdool Rayman Esmail, has been in the habit of teaching small boys of tender age the art of pilfering, and in return they have supported him in luxurious idleness by the fruits of their labour. This mutual obligation will now cease for the space of two years, which Esmail (who owned to nine previous convictions) will spend in the House of Correction.

THE FALL IN EXCHANGE: ITS ADVANTAGES.

IT could only be a bold man who would dare to advocate in India that the fall in exchange was anything but a curse to that country. Yet such a man has been found. He has written to an up country paper a letter bristling with arguments in favour of the present state of things financially, and, although he does not put his name to his letter the Editor must be in possession of it, and we may therefore give the writer the faint praise at least of having the courage of his opinions. But those opinions will shock the mind of every Indian official—civil, military or uncovenanted—who looks upon the rupee as a vanishing quantity and who denounces the Government as a robber worse than Barabbas. The writer in question holds that the present exchange is good for the country at large—good for the peasant, the artizan, the manufacturer and the zemindar—because it brings money to and keeps money in India, where it is wanted, instead of its going to England, which is already glutted with unemployed money. And he continues the argument thus :—

Believers in bi-metallism are not ignorant of, yet they blind their eyes to, the fact that since the rupee began to fall Indian industries have steadily risen. The deposits in all Indian Banks have enormously increased, which has led to cheaper money and to a stimulation of trade. Even the recent temporary tightness of money did not raise interest above the rates which were perfectly common when the rupee was at par.

The effect of any decided improvement in exchange would be disastrous. The large deposits now in Indian Banks would be withdrawn, and the Banks themselves would have to withdraw vast numbers of loans, and refuse further applications for advances to an extent which would paralyse trade.

The manufactures which have come into existence by a protective exchange would all suffer—many would collapse. It is almost certain that every cotton and woollen mill, every paper mill, every tannery, flour mill and brewery, would be in difficulties. Let any unbiassed person look at the accounts of these industries, and it will at once be apparent that they could not stand an improvement in exchange, which would reduce their prices by 30 or 40 per cent. Many other industries would suffer, every engineering firm and foundry in India would be badly hit, and all tea, coffee and indigo planters would very heavily feel how an improved exchange meant for them a decreased income. But it is not alone large industries which would be affected ; coach-builders, furniture makers, tailors and milliners would all sigh for the return of the happy days when the rupee was at 1s. 4d. No one much minds now-a-days paying Messrs. Dykes Rs. 1,500 for a carriage—it is only £100 after all, we say. Would Messrs. Dykes equally secure our custom if Rs. 1,500 was £150, or would our orders go to Long Acre ? Similarly our shirts would not be bought in Bombay, nor should we buy country-made furniture. We might even grumble at having to pay 6d. instead of 4d. for the Civil and Military Gazette.

All these matters might fairly be placed in the scale against the benefits a minority would derive by an improved exchange, but they are as nothing when compared with the effect on the mass of the people.

We imagine that it would not be difficult to detect more than one fallacy in the above arguments, and the example sum to be worked out in favour of dealing with Messrs. Dykes and Co. with the falling exchange is capable of being worked out in a very opposite way, for if Messrs. Dykes have to lose by the exchange in buying materials in England they are more likely to charge Rs. 2,000 than Rs. 1,500 for the required coach. In fact, the tradesmen who lose by the exchange will naturally recoup themselves from their customers for such loss.

The low exchange may benefit the Indian cultivator; but we take leave to doubt the writer's assertion that "the more exchange improves the less rupees zemindars and ryots will have for their crops," and that therefore the less easy it will be for them to contribute to the necessities of the State. Such an argument pushed to its logical conclusion means that the less valuable the rupee becomes the more valuable will become the land and its produce. But, after all, that very minority which the writer would ignore is the minority whose case must be taken into consideration. If the fall in exchange is to pauperise the handful of Englishmen who hold India it will be of little advantage to boast that it has enriched the Indian ryot. But the query is, Has it enriched him?

STOUTT—July 3, at Madras, Mr. William Stoutt, late of the Government Telegraph Department, aged 32.

HER Highness the Nawab Shahjehan, Begum of Bhopal, has compiled a Dictionary in Urdu, English, Persian, Arabic, Sanskrit, and Turkish, which she has called "Khazinat-ul-lugat," or Treasury of Languages. This her Highness is now prepared to distribute, at her own cost, to all important institutions throughout India.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—JULY 29.

—o—

COOPER'S-HILL COLLEGE.

The Earl of NORTHBROOK asked the Secretary of State for India whether it was proposed to offer a certain number of commissions in the Royal Engineers and the Royal Artillery to students at the Royal Engineering College at Cooper's-hill.

Lord HARRIS said perhaps the noble earl would allow him to reply to the question. It was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to offer thirteen commissions if there were that number of cadets available and qualified. At present the matter was being discussed between the War Office and the India Office.

Viscount CROSS desired to supplement his noble friend's answer by pointing out that the training for the year would begin in September next, and he hoped the commissions which were offered would be an inducement to gentlemen who wanted to enter the Army to go to that most excellent institution at Coopers-hill. He had satisfied himself that a more excellent education was not to be got anywhere.

In answer to Lord SANDHURST,

Viscount CROSS said he certainly hoped the offer of commissions would be continued from year to year.

The Earl of MORLEY asked whether that proposal would diminish the number of people at Woolwich.

Lord HARRIS said there was certainly no intention of reducing the number of cadets in the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. If the Royal Military Academy, being full, could not supply the number of officers required, he had no doubt the War Office would again apply to Coopers-hill College. The noble earl was no doubt aware that the question was one of age, as pupils entered Coopers-hill College older than cadets entered the Royal Military Academy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JULY 29.

POSTAGE TO INDIA.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, referring to the correspondence between the Secretary of State for India and the hon. member for Canterbury dealing with the complaint of the latter that the postage to India from England is 5d. per half ounce for letters, while it is 2½d. per half ounce from France, Germany, and Russia to India, and also with the fact that the postage on newspapers to Ceylon is 1½d. each, while it is only 1d. to Australia, 5,000 miles further, whether he had received a report from the Postmaster-General, to whom he referred the correspondence, and what action was intended to be taken in regard to the question.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: The point of the hon. member's question is as to what action is intended to be taken. No action is intended to be taken in the matter.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the First Lord of the Treasury, as they were now approaching the end of the Session, when the Indian Budget would be taken.

Mr. W. H. SMITH: I am very glad indeed to have an assurance from the hon. member that we are approaching the end of the Session. ("Hear" and a laugh.) I am afraid, however, that I cannot now state when the Indian Budget will be brought forward. Certain measures must be passed and further progress made with supply before the Indian Budget can be taken.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked that two days' notice might be given of the Indian Budget.

Mr. W. H. SMITH: Without entering into a pledge—the difficulty of doing which at this period of the Session the hon. member is aware of—I will endeavour to give the notice which he desires.

EVICTIONS IN CEYLON.

Sir E. WATKIN asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies why the returns of "vital statistics in Ceylon, formerly published as a Supplement to the Gazette, were stopped in 1887, whether it was the case that the deaths recorded in these returns under the item of "deaths by starvation" were mainly produced by the eviction of the cultivators from ancestral holdings for non-payment of rent or tax; whether these evictions had been and were now carried on by thousands in a year, and invariably followed by starvation and death; and would he grant a return of the number of evictions and deaths from starvation for each year, 1869 to 1889, inclusive.

Baron H. DE WORMS: It is not known why the statistics alluded to in the first paragraph of the question, which were printed in 1887, were not again printed last year in the Gazette. They are no doubt published in the administrative reports. As regards the second paragraph, it is not known here that the deaths from starvation, which were three in 1886 and nine in 1887, were the result of evictions. As regards the third paragraph, the Governor ascertained that the author of this grave statement could adduce no proofs in support of it, and it is believed to be at least a very gross exaggeration. The Governor is causing a searching inquiry to be made into the circumstances and results of the evictions, and will be requested to cause the return mentioned in the last paragraph of the question to be added to the report.

Digitized by Google

Sir E. WATKIN: Can the right hon. gentleman say when the information is likely to be received?

Baron H. DE WORMS: There will be no delay whatever in obtaining the information.

THE DOCK AT BOMBAY.

In answer to Admiral FIELD,

Lord G. HAMILTON said: The arrangement proposed as to the construction of the Bombay Dock was that the Indian Government were to build the dock and the Admiralty to bear a moiety of the cost. This division of cost raised financial considerations in which the Treasury necessarily had a leading voice. The delay which has occurred in settling the question arises from the inability of the Treasury to treat this as an isolated question of finance, but rather as one which carries with it necessarily a review of the general contribution which India makes towards the maintenance of an Imperial Navy.

A RETROSPECT OF THIRTY YEARS IN INDIA.

Thirty years have passed over my head since I first landed from an outward-bound vessel at Prinseps-ghât, and, with the exception of some few years in Upper and Central India, the whole of that period has been spent in Bengal, and about twenty years in Calcutta and its immediate neighbourhood. In that long sojourn in this land I have acquired some knowledge of the language and of the ways of the people; but still, whenever I sit down to meditate on men and things, the humiliating thought forces itself upon my mind, how little, in spite of the opportunities we have had, do I really know of the inner life of the people among whom our lot has been cast. Yet we flatter ourselves, and those whose ignorance is even greater than ours, flatter us with the idea that we know more of their ways, manners, and customs than many others do. It is no uncommon thing for men to say, "Oh, you ask So-and-so, he has been here for years, and talks Bengali like a native; he knows all about it," and so So-and-so poses as an authority, when in his inmost heart he knows that he is but an impostor. No! humiliating as the confession is, we know absolutely nothing of the inner life, and the aspirations, thoughts, and feelings of the vast Native population of this great dependency of the British Crown. And why is this so? Why is it that neither the official, the merchant, the soldier, the Anglican parson, the Roman Catholic priest, the Denominational minister, the medical man, nor any European of any class or profession can penetrate the inner life of our Hindoo fellow-subjects? How is it that although the most intimate official or business relations may exist between an Englishman and Hindoo or Mahomedan for years together—although there may be the greatest confidence and trust in all matters affecting their daily official or business life, yet their private and domestic relations are sealed books. Their doings and belongings out of cutcherry or office are a total blank? A time comes when the deputy baboo or the moomsif mohasay brings to his collector, magistrate, or the district judge; or the banian or head book-keeper of a mercantile firm brings to his burra saheb a well grown lad bearing a fair resemblance to himself, and introduces him to his "ma-bap" as his son to be patronised and helped into the uncovenanted service or promoted to a stool in the office; but of the lad's mother or sisters no word is said, and like Topsy, he might "have growed" without any such domestic relationships. It is of course difficult for an Englishman to take a real interest in the welfare of a lad who has grown up altogether a stranger to him, however, much he may have valued his father's services, and his official or business integrity; and so the social gap widens instead of closing up. There is always a strange reticence between an Englishman and a native, between employer and employed, in regard to all domestic relations, and we are apt, seeing as we do only the outside, to consider natives callous and without feeling or affection.

Some day perhaps our head clerk or accountant absents himself from office on the plea that his wife, mother, or daughter is very ill, and in a day or two he comes to work and resumes his duties without remark; but instead of the neatly-folded turban cloth or tussar chupkan, white trousers, and patent leather shoes, he is bareheaded, shaven, clad in dhoti, chudder, and with bare sandalled feet. If we know anything of the ways of the people, we know what these signs mean—they are equivalent to the crape on the hat and on the arm of the office coat, the black tie, and dingy mourning which renders our grief so hideous; but we ask no question, nor does he volunteer any remark. We have known young and inexperienced office masters inquire in tones of anger what a clerk meant by presenting himself before him improperly dressed, but this again was ignorance. Wherever there has been social intercourse between European and Native it has been in the case of those of the latter race who have thrown aside caste trammels and adopted (not always the best phase of) European manners and customs; but even here the intimacy is only on the surface. There is always some other phase of existence, some other side to their life to which we are not admitted. Our civilian, legal or medical friend, who goes about his daily professional duties in black frock-coat and pot-hat, insists on being styled Mr. or Esq. instead of Baboo or Rai Bahadoor, and occasionally takes his wife to a Lieutenant-Governor's, Bishop's, or Judge's "at home," but does not invite us to a quiet family dinner, or afternoon tea and tennis with the ladies of his family.

We go to dine with our good friend Prince or Nawab ——, and our courteous and gentlemanly host takes his seat at the head of the table and dispenses his hospitality in right noble style, but the ladies of his household are conspicuous by their absence. Yet we know that our entertainer is no bachelor, nor widower, but a very much married man, and that only a wall divides us from fair and comely maids and matrons, whom to look upon would be profanation and to attempt to speak to would be an insult. Yet their husbands and fathers visit us and are received by our families as any other gentlemen of any other nation would be. Raja or Baboo (phullana) invites his European friends to dinner at his garden-house, incurs a lot of expense, hires steam-launches to bring his friends up the river; orders everything of the best from the Great Eastern, a large Europe dinner with a profusion of wines, liquors, and ices; Mahomedan kitmutgars, and an Eurasian steward. The host himself, if still too orthodox to sit down with his guests, wandering round behind their chairs, while every door and window is crowded up with brothers, cousins, and friends, come to see the Sahib-logue feed; while the entertainment winds up with a second-rate nautch (for the real thing is dying out of the land) and dramatic entertainment and the "Sham Bazaar Amateur Concert." Or we go with a general invitation, or without one, to the public Doorga Pooja nautches at the Sobha Bazaar Rajbaree or mansion of some wealthy banian. By the Griffin or globe trotter this may be looked upon as an insight into Native life and Native ways; but 'we others' know better, and to me it has often been a source of annoyance and shame to see the want of politeness and courtesy which too often distinguishes the behaviour of our own countrymen on these occasions. I have seen men who claimed to be gentlemen rush for places at the table, as if they were in a railway station refreshment-room with fifteen minutes to snatch a meal in, order the servants about as if they had paid for their dinner at a table d'hôte, jostle past their host as if he were a coolie, or one of Madame Tussaud's wax figures, and made audible remarks about him and his family and surroundings that made us blush for our nationality. Of course a great deal of this apparent rudeness is due to the sheer ignorance of the people and their manners and customs, but it seems inexplicable that Englishmen can pass so many years of their lives amongst an Oriental people and yet remain so entirely ignorant and unsympathetic. An example of the gross bêtise of which English men and women are constantly guilty in their occasional interconrse with Natives came under my personal observation a year or two ago. A well-known Indian Prince who has had an exceptional European education, entertained a number of his English friends at dinner. After dinner the party adjourned to the drawing-room, where stood a grand piano; some of the ladies present played and sang, and a lady, who had certainly lived long enough in the East to know better, came up to her host with a simper and said: "Won't you sing something, Marahaja—can you sing us a Hindostanee song? Something funny?" The lady meant no harm, but everyone present felt the awkwardness of the situation. On another occasion I was dining in company with a Native gentleman who had long adopted English customs and English dress, held an appointment in Her Majesty's service, and was in all essentials except name and colour an Englishman. A European sitting next him, after several blunt and impertinent remarks and questions which we vainly strove to smother, capped his rudeness by asking in an audible tone: "Well, Baboo, I suppose your father wore a dhoti?"

Whatever may be the causes, and they are many, there is no disputing the fact that between the English and the people of the country there is a great gulf fixed, and time does not appear to lessen it; nay, to our eyes it seems to widen. We do not make the friendships we used to; a new generation is springing up that is not like the old. India to the class of Europeans that now flock to the country is becoming less and less a home. The competition civilian of the present day is as a rule a very different person to the Haileybury man of the past. He comes to the country full of preconceived ideas of his own importance and of the extent of his own knowledge. He does not come to learn; he is already crammed with learning on every conceivable subject relating to India and its Government, as an egg is full of meat; as a judicial officer the High Court cannot teach him anything, has he not studied every system of jurisprudence, from the laws of Rome to the American statutes? Sometimes he is an Irishman and a Home Ruler. As an administrator he has neither time nor, possibly, inclination to study the people and their wants and feelings. He is a bird of passage. He rushes from district to district, from magisterial work to revenue, from revenue to secretariat, from the Bengal Office to the India Office, from the finance department to the political agency; from Bengal to the Central Provinces, from Burma to Simla, and never remaineth in one stay until he finally finds rest on the heights of Jakko, and the stars of the firmament descend and rest upon his breast and he becomes as the gods! He knows nothing of the people, and they know less of him. He is a part of a machine which runs in certain undeviable grooves, which is governed from home. He is a penman and a desk-grubber, often weak-sighted, weak-chested, and undersized. He is not of the stamp of man who ruled the land in old days, and to whom the hog-spear and the rifle were as familiar as the pen and the codes; and then he seldom has the prestige attaching to the old names which smacked of Leadenhall-street and John Company Bahadoor. But what of that? Is he not destined to bear after his name the magic letters K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E.? What are the humble C.B. and V.C. won by such men of the last generation as Alonzo Money, Ebenezer Couper, Ross Mangles, and Macdonell, to the glittering stars and enamelled jam-tarts which in the fulness of time must inevitably decorate those stiff-necked coats, without which existence in these days is impossible! To those of us who are old enough to associate the local magnates of Bengal with such names as D'Oyley, Prinsep, Lushington, Trevor, Plowden, Raikes, Grote, Bayley, Bell, Grant, Halliday, Jackson, Beadon, Cockerell, Mangles, Young, Pringle, Tayler, Stainforth, and others, the decadence is evident, the contrast is strong. Where, too, are our Calcutta merchant princes and the magnificent planters of the old days, the men who kept elephants and horses without number and built such palaces as "Mimluath" and "Baboo Coley," and kept open houses for all comers? Gone, with the might of John Company, and the old civilians and the old prestige! S.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Bombay Volunteer Artillery have been affiliated with the Royal Artillery and placed under the orders of the officer commanding the Royal Artillery in the Bombay District.

IT is notified in an Army Circular that tentage and horse allowance will be deemed liable to income-tax, unless an officer has his camp equipage in serviceable condition, and actually maintains the numbers of bonâ fide chargers prescribed for this rank.

SUBADAR KISHANBIR NAGARKOTE, of the 5th Gurkhas, who showed such gallantry when Major Battye and Captain Urmston were killed a year ago on the Black Mountain, has been granted a gold bar with the words "18th June, 1888" to be worn with his decoration of the Order of Merit.

ARRANGEMENTS are to be made to relieve the British troops in the Chin hills at the earliest possible date. Recent telegrams from that quarter have shown how much the men are beginning to feel the results of hard work and exposure now that the rains have set in.

IT has been decided to build a fort at Murga, at the mouth of the Zhob Valley. The site was decided on by a committee at the end of last April. Half a company of the 2nd Biluchis and twenty-five sabres of the 6th Bombay Cavalry, under a British officer, have left Loralai as an escort to the Executive Engineer and workmen to be employed on the construction of the fort.

THERE are to be only two Superintendents of Army Clothing for all India, viz., Calcutta and Madras. The Bombay Clothing Department will be abolished in the autumn, when Colonel Latouche, at present Superintendent, will be given the Madras appointment which recently fell vacant and which has not been filled permanently. Bombay will therefore be no sufferer in the way of appointments consequent on this change.

OWING to the pressure caused by service in Upper Burma, where many substitutes are wanted to replace the casualties due to sickness and wounds, the Madras Staff Corps is for the present to be interdicted from supplying any officers to the Punjab Frontier Force and corps under the Government of India. This will be a disappointment to many young officers who would in the ordinary course have been transferred, on selection, from the Southern Presidency.

TWO Courts-Martial have been recently held in the Allahabad District on soldiers who were charged with striking their superior officers while in the execution of their duty. In one instance it was Private John Bull of the 1st Battalion East Surrey Regiment, and in the other Gunner John Harris of 1-1 Scottish Division. The former has been awarded rigorous imprisonment for six months, and the latter, whose degree of offence was probably greater, to rigorous imprisonment for three months and to be discharged with ignominy from the service.

RULES regarding the tenure of office in the Judge Advocate-General's Department are published. Five years is laid down as the term for a Judge Advocate-General, but he must vacate on succession to colonel's allowance. Deputy and Assistant Advocate-Generals are subject to similar conditions, but they must also vacate on promotion to general officer. Transfer to the unemployed supernumerary list will involve vacation of all appointments in the Department. The tenure of appointment of present incumbents will be reckoned from the date of this order, June 28th.

CAMPS OF EXERCISE.

The proposed artillery, cavalry and district concentrations for the coming cold season are as follows:—An artillery Camp near Gurgaon will be held from 21st November to 12th December, and siege operations at Roorkee, allotment Rs. 6,000, and will be attended by artillery from Meerut, Umballa, Campbellpore, Saugor, Bareilly, Jhansi, and four batteries located at Roorkee. The Cavalry Camp near Lallamusa, or Gujranwalla, will be held from 1st to 28th January; allotment Rs. 8,000 Artillery from Pindi and Sealkote will be present besides Cavalry from Pindi, Sealkote, Nowshera, Jullundur, Dhera Ghazi Khan, Edwardesabad, and Kohat district. Concentrations: (1) Rawal Pindi, allotment Rs. 5,500. Besides the troops located at Pindi, Infantry from Meerut, Nowshera, Peshawur, Sealkote, Jhelum, and Abbotabad; (2) Meean Meer, allotment Rs. 6,000, outside troops from Ferozepore, Jullundur, Nowshera, and Bakloh; (3) Umballa, allotment Rs. 1,500, West Yorkshire Regiment from Meean Meer; (4) Meerut, allotment Rs. 4,000, outside troops from Agra, Delhi, Dehra Dun, and Roorkee; (5) Lucknow, allotment Rs. 3,500, outside troops from Fyzabad.

THE BOMBAY RELIEFS.

THE Bombay Presidency Reliefs for 1889-90 are out, and are as follows:—

Horse Artillery—G-B from Mhow to Secunderabad; and H-B Secunderabad to Mhow.

Garrison Artillery—2-1 Northern Division from Malta to Bombay; 1-1 Cinque Ports Division from Malta to Aden; 5-1 Southern Division from Bombay to England; 6-1 Southern Division from Aden to England; 7-1 Southern Division from Aden to England; and 1-1 North Irish Division from Malta to Aden.

Native Artillery—No. 1 Mountain Battery, from Poona to Loralai, Ruetta District.

British Cavalry—The 5th Lancers from Mhow to Neemuch; and the 18th Hussars from England to Mhow.

British Infantry—The 1st Battalion East Riding Regiment from Aden to England; the 2nd Battalion Leicester Regiment from Burma to Aden; the 1st Battalion Loyal North Lancashire Regiment from Mhow to Kampti; the 2nd Battalion Middlesex Regiment from Kampti to Mhow; the 2nd Battalion Durham Light Infantry from Poonah to Quetta; and the 1st Battalion Worcestershire Regiment from Quetta to Poona.

Bombay Cavalry—The 5th from Quetta to Jacobabad; and the 7th from Jacobabad to Quetta.

Bombay Infantry—The 3rd (Light Infantry) from Aden to Satara; the 9th from Satara to Mhow; the 12th from Ahmedabad to Quetta; the 17th from Mhow to Aden; and the 22nd from Quetta to Ahmedabad.

A DISTINGUISHED ORIENTAL LINQUIST.—Sergeant-Instructor W. J. Prendergast, H. V. Rifles, has just added another to his many honours and accomplishments. He is a clever linguist, having distinguished himself in Oriental languages in particular. Some time ago he passed the High Proficiency Standard in Urdu; it is only six months since he obtained honours in Persian; and now he has passed the Higher Standard in Arabic at the Civil and Military Examination in Bombay.

CAPUA IN THE HILLS.

A correspondent writing from Simla to a home paper says :—

Lord Lansdowne has left Calcutta for the Himalayas, so his Excellency will be able before long to decide from personal experience on the rival claims of Calcutta and Simla as the capital of India. People who have never visited either place are apt to form a somewhat inaccurate estimate of their respective advantages. Simla too often suggests nothing more than a Capua in the mountains ; an earthly paradise of grass-widows and spring captains, where the women dance all night and dress all day, as Pope says, and the men, from the Governor-General in Council down to the officiating Assistant Under-Secretary in the Miscellaneous Department, do little else than ride gaily up and down the Mall, or "sketch" with Amaryllis in the shade of the pine-trees or in the seclusion of the "Kala juga." This view of works and days at Simla was fairly hit off in some encore verses written a few years ago for an amateur performance of Patience at the Simla Theatre. One stanza ran as follows :—

"Conceive me, if you can,
A Rockcliffe hotel young man ;
A kiss-and-don't-tell young man,
A take 'em to Pelliti's and stuff 'em with sweeties,
Adore-them-all-round young man."

The Rockcliffe, it should be understood, is a remarkably lively caravanserai on the hill-top, while the establishment founded by a certain Signor Pelliti, an Italian confectioner, is the chosen rendezvous for all the idlers and elegants of the place. And certainly, as long as one has nothing particular to do, Simla is one of the most delightful of watering-places. But real work can be and is done there ; whereas in Calcutta, even at the best of times, the worker is always being thrown out of gear by the terrible unhealthiness of the place. Calcutta, indeed, has been described as a cesspool with the lid on ; and the description is true enough, though it should be added that the lid is cracked in several places. The inhabitants again are utterly unlike the population of real India ; and the place is a hotbed of cowardice and sedition. Any other city of the plains would be preferable to Calcutta as the winter capital ; and the idea of staying there all the year round is pure madness.

If newspaper and magazine articles mean anything, the English public is not altogether indifferent to the subject of Indian frontier defence. Out here we seem to have travelled beyond the talking stage and to have made fair progress towards getting the decks clear for action. The cold season just ended has been a busy one for the soldier ; and a cavalry officer tells me that he has never been so hard worked since the Mutiny. Sir Charles Dilke's articles in the Fortnightly Review are a good deal criticised. He seems to have gone back with an absurdly exaggerated idea of the impregnability of Quetta. But no doubt this is what the fortifications there were meant for—to be talked about, and to give an air of finality to our schemes of frontier defence. As a matter of fact this fortress does not even defend the railway. It would take an enormous army to garrison it, and even then the position might be turned. The real point stratégique in this direction is Candahar and Candahar only, and no fortifications at Quetta will help us. The works at Quetta may even do infinite harm by keeping a number of men shut up in one place who would be better employed outside. But if the Russians do advance to the Hindoo Koosh, that is if they take Herat and Balkh, the danger will not be in the south but on the Balkh-Cabul line.

The discovery of the so-called Cashmere plot has made a considerable stir. Only a few months ago his Highness the Maharajah was entertaining a number of English guests at his capital right royally, and he gave a grand ball, also, to the residents of Sialkote. The cotillon on that occasion was quite a splendid spectacle ; the presents were marvels of Asiatic munificence. Speaking personally, I myself would rather not accept the hospitalities of His Highness Pertab Singh, and I cannot understand how Englishmen could let their wives and daughters dance at his ball ; but this, of course, is a matter of taste ; and there are ladies in Anglo-India who would take the devil himself as a partner if they thought he waltzed well. However, about this time it was politely believed that the Maharajah was at last appearing in a new and more favourable light. Then the story of the treasonable letters leaked out. The wildest rumours were in circulation ; but the real state of the case is simple enough. The Maharajah, who is more than half an imbecile, has had a mania for writing compromising letters. Some time ago, during the old Maharajah's lifetime, Pertab Singh, then heir apparent, was induced by his friend and mentor—a man of the worst type—to write certain papers in which he accused himself of murdering his brother and committing divers other crimes. These papers the Prince was induced to place in the hands of his friend ; and any treasonable correspondence that has now been discovered may be traced to the same sinister influence. But such a discovery would be absolutely without political significance and would prove nothing but what was known before—namely, that the Maharajah of Cashmere is a wretched imbecile, entirely in the hands of unscrupulous scoundrels. If the Government of India is anxious to get rid of him and to assume the administration, either directly or through the medium of a Council, it might easily have done so without unearthing an old scandal.

INDIAN FOLKLORE.

"An Unimaginative Witness" furnishes the Allahabad paper with interesting information :—

The Vaccinator.—Once upon a time there was a railway company who were building a line between places called Jubbulpore and Allahabad in India. About the same time the Local Government was benevolently starting vaccination in the Native States through which the line ran. The Natives of the country looked on the railway with awe and on the vaccinator with suspicion. Mothers hid away their children whenever the dreaded "narchirwa" came into the locality. The dreadful report was whispered in hushed accents over the land that the Sirkar required the vital strength of India's young lives to supply the iron demon with power, and that it was the duty of the newly established department to prey on the lives of their offspring, whose vital forces would wane as the iron monster snorted and throve. Thus children were not forthcoming, cocoanuts and plantains were offered up to the "Injinji," and small-pox is rife in those parts to this day.

Capital Punishment.—Another Brahmin hanged for the venial offence of cutting his old mother's head off because his enemy and creditor laid an embargo on his buffalo. Why didn't he kill a cow? A proceeding that would not have endangered his neck and would have fetched the bunniah awfully. The slaughter of a holy cow would have given the hard-hearted creditor a real scare, whereas the removal of an effete old lady would not weigh very heavy on his conscience. Had the Brahmin only given the matter his due consideration he and his old mother would probably be alive now and the bunniah a poorer man with a very bad conscience. But, then, if no hangings took place, whence would the "Malika Muazima Sahiba" get years to tack on to her royal life?

The Doctor Sahib.—European doctors are doubtlessly very clever, but they cannot do what any good Native "baid" or "hakim" can accomplish. The Sahib must see his patient and feel his pulse, asks all sorts of questions, applies "durbins" to his chest and back, and gives him all sorts of nasty medicines and vexatious injunctions. Native practitioners are much more advanced. They needn't even see the patient. In the case of a purdanashin a string attached to the lady's wrist was enough. The "baid" held the other end, standing outside the house. He was then at once able to diagnose the case, and prescribe without the slightest hesitation. What Sahib could do this? The woman died ; such was God's will!

A Cholera Cure.—Cholera was rife. My punkhawallah was seized with the malady and refused European science. The "baid" came and at once prescribed the following efficacious potions:—The eye in the feather of a peacock's tail reduced to ashes on a hot iron plate. A "mantra" written in Sanscrit on straw paper by the hand of a Brahmin whose parents are both alive ; also to be reduced to ashes. The calcined remains of the two above ingredients to be well stirred up with a stick of the tulsi plant in half a seer of the best Gangapani. When ready, to be drunk at once by the patient, while in motion three times round the sacred pipal tree close by on a charpoy carried by four Brahmins, who must all have male offspring living. That punkhawallah recovered. Such is the power of faith!

Miracles.—Miracles—of course they happen. About halfway between Jubbulpore and Allahabad I daresay you have observed a conical hill with a white building and a tree on its summit. This is the famous "Sarda Debi" shrine. Thousands of pilgrims toil up the 700 or so steps with much vexation of spirit and much spiritual edification. But this is not all. The more fervent cut off their tongues in honour of the local divinity, and after a certain number of days the missing portion of this organ and the power of speech are miraculously restored. The facts are perfectly true ; for though I have never personally assisted at an excision service, I have often seen the holy patients dumbly ascending and descending the 700 and odd sacred steps. They wouldn't let me open their mouths.

IT is expected that Dr. Andrew Duncan, of the Indian Medical Service, at present at home on furlough, will succeed the late Dr. Boyce Smith as Professor of Military Medicine at the Netley Hospital.

PUNJAB INDEBTEDNESS.

The Allahabad paper, in criticising the annual revenue report, says:—

"The most interesting portion of the present report is that which deals with the question of agricultural debt and of consequent transfers of agricultural right. The Financial Commissioner admits that his figures upon this subject are quite untrustworthy; but there is an almost universal concurrence of testimony that sales and mortgages are everywhere on the increase, and that this increase is, in some places, almost startling both in rapidity and amount. What are we to think of these things? This is the riddle of the Sphinx before which the revenue officer now stands at gaze, and upon his answer to which depend not perhaps the issues of prosperity or decline, but certainly both the speed and the direction of future provincial development. The Punjab Government has wisely ordered a special inquiry, of which the results will be formulated during the present year. What these may be it were vain to prophesy. But one thing at least is clear. In the questions at issue considerations of politics, economy, sentiment and morality are almost inextricably blended. National wealth is opposed to individual happiness, liberty to regulation, and antique custom to modern progress. Along with these discordant factors is the inevitable pity for ignorant men who, amid the wreck of their old habits, swerved from the dictates of a prudence which they had never learnt. All this is but a part of the problem, but it is enough to show what excellent material and facility it affords for sophistication and bewilderment. If we dwell too much upon local distinctions we may falsely conclude that no general answer to the question is possible. If we neglect these distinctions we may be taken in the net of some one-sided theorist. If we give free play to our feelings we shall injure those whom we wish to serve. If we shut ourselves up in a cold intellectualism we shall be accused of apathy, if not of cruelty, and we may give occasion for a formidable discontent. Never was there greater need for clear notions, for disciplined thinking and for an accurate sense of proportion. Above all, never was there greater need for the temper which can realise the future as well as the present, and can furnish not only a temporary remedy for a temporary distress, but an institute to govern, control and satisfy the coming generations."

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

Mr. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes :—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formu'a of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole prorietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

Every Saturday. Price Sixpence.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 28, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, AUGUST 12, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 23rd July; from Allahabad and Madras to the 21st July; and from Calcutta to the 21st July.

WHEN the Viceroy visits Lahore next November his Excellency will be presented with the honorary degree of Doctor of Oriental Literature by the Punjab University. The last recipient of this honour was H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught.

LORD LANSDOWNE has offered for annual competition during his term of office five silver and two bronze medals in connection with the Countess of Dufferin Fund. The silver medals will be awarded to female medical students in the Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Lahore, and Agra Colleges, and the bronze to those of Agra and Hyderabad. The Maharaja of Jodhpore has promised to endow two scholarships at the Agra Medical College, and two Brahmin girls will shortly proceed there for a course of training.

LORD AND LADY REAY will pay a visit to the Viceroy at Simla in September, while Lord Connemara will follow their example in October.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT presided on July 17th at a Masonic function at Poona, the occasion being the installation of Major Guyon as Worshipful Master of Lodge Orion in the West.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN on coming down from the Hills will pay a visit to Benares. Opportunity will be taken of the Lieut.-Governor's visit for holding the installation of the new Maharaja.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY left Calcutta on July 16th for Behar, in order to judge for himself the condition of the people in that Province.

SIR JOHN EDGAR, Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government, left Calcutta on July 17th for Orissa, to inquire into the condition of the Tributary Mahals.

CONSEQUENT on the appointment of Mr. Shephard to the Madras High Court, Mr. Branson will be confirmed as Government Advocate.

THE Honourable Baba Khem Singh, who has been appointed to succeed Nawab Sir Nawazish Ali Khan as Additional Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, has arrived at Simla.

GENERAL SIR G. WHITE left Simla for Quetta on July 16. He has prepared for the Government of India a report on the operations in Upper Burmah since the troops ceased to form a field force.

AS the garrison of Burmah is under the direct control of the Madras Commander-in-Chief, His Excellency will be asked to submit to army headquarters a plan of operations on the Chin frontier in connection with the opening out of the Lushai country in the cold weather. It is calculated that 2,500 men from the Burmah side and 2,000 from Chittagong will be required for the expedition.

THE plans of defensive works for the Khojak tunnel are now being worked out at Simla. During Sir G. White's visit the general measures required for holding the position about Chaman on the northern slope of the Amran range were considered.

COLONEL BIRCH, Deputy Superintendent of the Andamans, is posted to the Punjab as an officiating Cantonment Magistrate. He will be temporarily employed until November 30th, by which time he will have completed his service for pension.

CAPTAIN DURAND has reached Skardo on his journey to Hunza and Naga, having made good time in marching in spite of the difficulties of the road.

NEWS received viâ Chitral confirms the idea that the rebellion in Badakshan is not likely to assume dangerous proportions.

MORE of Ishak Khan's disbanded followers are reported to have reached Khorasan, but their number is not sufficiently great to cause any trouble to the Persian authorities.

THE blockade established last May against the Durkhanis and hill Lasharis for disturbing the Dera Ghazi Khan border by tribal quarrels has had satisfactory results. There has been no fresh fighting, and the raiding parties have returned to their homes. Both sides have now sworn peace on the Koran, and the Durkhanis have made complete submission, surrendering all men concerned in the murder which was at the head of their offences. The Commissioner of the Derajat has been authorised accordingly to raise the blockade when he thinks it expedient.

THE report of the Committee on Public Works Account has been submitted. Mr. R. G. Macdonald's report has also been completed, and will show a saving of some nine lakhs on the present expenditure. The members of the Committee who are at Simla on deputation return immediately to their ordinary appointments.

THE situation in Sikkim remains unchanged. It is unlikely, in the absence of any fresh development, that the Government will do more than maintain the status quo. The garrison may therefore expect to be gradually withdrawn.

LATEST reports from Dera Ghazi Khan speak of actual danger of the cantonment being washed away owing to the stoppage of the protective works against floods. The works will probably be resumed forthwith.

CAPTAIN B. DUFF, 9th Bengal Infantry, has received the gold medal of the F. S. Institute for the annual prize essay on the employment of Europeans and Eurasians as auxiliaries to British troops. Captain A. H. Mason was second.

THREE European lads, named Pearson, Lyle, and Harrison, pupils of the Bishop's School, Panchganni, were drowned while bathing in a tank on July 20th.

THE weather throughout India continues, on the whole, quiet, and of a normal monsoon character.

THE first quarter of the year 1889-90 was a prosperous one for Indian State Railways. The State lines worked by companies show an increase in the gross receipts of 16½ lakhs compared with last year, the State Railways worked by Government showing an increase of 15½ lakhs. On the other hand, the guaranteed companies earned 25 lakhs less. This deficiency, however, is partly normal, being due to the transfer of the Bhopal Itarsi line from the Great Indian Peninsula to the Midland. The increased earnings of the principal lines was as follows:—Rajpootana-Malwa and North-Western, each upwards of seven lakhs; Midland, five lakhs; Burma, four lakhs; Madras, two and a half lakhs; Eastern Bengal, two lakhs; East Indian, one and a quarter lakhs. The Midland has increased in mileage from 211 to 674 miles; Burma from 392 to 553; the Bengal-Nagpore from 186 to 305. The total receipts of the Bengal-Nagpore for the quarter amounted to six lakhs.

IT is stated that the Government of India are still discussing the terms on which the Hyderabad-Umarkot Railway can be made with the Bombay Government. The latter are understood to be willing to be provincially responsible for the financial results, and when their reply has been received to a proposal that has been made for carrying out this principle, the matter will be submitted to the Secretary of State.

MR. SIMS, manager of an indigo factory, has been committed for trial at Mozufferpore, on a charge of causing the death of a Native employé.

NOTES.

ACCORDING to the Times telegram which will be found in another column, the Lushai expeditionary force will be put in motion at the close of the rains. The Calcutta correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that the Thibetan negotiations resulting in a hopeless deadlock, the Government of India is disposed to rely on the hope that after the lesson of last year the Thibetans will leave Sikkim alone. He adds: "The whole Sikkim affair is regarded here as disappointing. Some papers even protest against a garrison being maintained at Gnatong." This is a little confusing. Does Calcutta want a row on that fertile frontier, so that the Indian tax-payers may have another "little war" to pay for?

BOMBAY will hardly be of that opinion, having a row already on hand. The unfortunately blunt remarks of Mr. Ommaney, to the effect that the Parsees have no "superior morality" to boast of, have caused a most terrible stirring of the fire latent in the brave bosoms of the Fire Worshippers. But the most awful consequence to be dreaded is the stirring up again of the whole Crawford case, of which the public in India have surely had enough. It was injudicious, perhaps, to publish Mr. Ommaney's opinions, but it is to be hoped that as they embraced not only Parsees in their condemnation, but "all sorts and conditions of men" who took part in the Crawford controversy, wrath may be appeased and gentle commerce once more resume her peaceful sway in the Bombay bazaars.

A "SOBER-MINDED" Parsee gives good advice to his fellow-worshippers in a letter to one of the local papers:—"The Crawford inquiry," he says, "has shown that the unfortunate victims to Mr. Crawford's corruption belonged to all races, and it is therefore not prudent on the part of any particular race or section to boast of superior morality, as after all human nature in its broad features is the same everywhere." So it is—but the pity of it—oh moral Parsee!

THE Rangoon correspondent of the Times continues in his reckless way to carp at the British administration of Upper Burma. Constant exposure of his misstatements and malice has seemingly no effect upon him or his employers. In his telegram to-day he returns to the story of the Native woman "branded" by the police as an established fact. The Rangoon Gazette just arrived says: "In spite of our amateur detectives and their efforts the 'branded' lady has been found. But alas! and alas! and alas! There is no brand. There is only a faint illegible mark on the temple, which is alleged by the injured fair one to represent a tatoo mark." The falsehood appears likely to outlast the "brand."

THE want of a proper undertaker in Mandalay is causing dissatisfaction, and, as the local paper hints, if this state of things continues people are likely to go and die elsewhere at great inconvenience and expense. It seems that the want of an undertaker in Mandalay is due to a poor spirit of enterprise rather than to want of work. It is indeed said that "there is unfortunately plenty of room for a good undertaker in Mandalay, for the death-rate of Upper Burma can give the death-rate of Lower Burma considerable odds." However the merits of this rivalry of death-rates may lie, it is surely well to rely on private enterprise to find out a good field. It is complained that there are one or two individuals "who undertake" in Mandalay, but they do things in a loose and perfunctory manner, and give no satisfaction at all.

THE Rangoon Gazette says that there are two peculiarities in Burma which it is very difficult to find a satisfactory explanation of. One is that joint-stock companies are very few and far between, and the other that the cultivation of the ground is so entirely neglected by capitalists:—"Here we have abundance of rich land suitable for tobacco cultivation and other similar industries, but no one takes up the work."

WHAT about the oil fields of Burma, which are said to embrace an area of not less than one hundred square miles? Dr. Noetling, the palæontologist attached to the Government Survey of India, is of opinion that in the coming future the oil industry will rank amongst the most important mineral industries of Burma. "Shareholders in Burma oil mines will," he says, "get a much better profit out of their shares than the 300 holders who are lucky—or may I say unlucky?—enough to be the owners of Burma ruby mine shares will get out of theirs."

THE benighted travellers in a strange land who exclaimed, on coming in view of a gallows, "Thank God! we're in a civilised country," will find that civilisation is extending rapidly in this respect to Kashmir—the new Native adminstration there having indented upon the Punjab Government for a supply of efficient goalers. The gallows will, it is to be hoped, not have to follow. In spite of all rumours to the contrary the new administration is working well. Besides several internal reforms, the Council of State have now arranged for giving the troops their arrears of pay, and for regularity of payment in future. This is a matter which needed prompt attention, as the so-called Kashmir "army" had suffered a great deal owing to the men being rarely paid. The action now taken will greatly facilitate the reorganisation of the regiments which have been selected to share in the defence of the North-West Frontier.

ONE of the subjects at present exercising the speculations of military men is, remarks the Civil and Military Gazette, the question of Sir Frederick Robert's successor as Commander-in-Chief in India. It is widely supposed that H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught is anxious to hold the chief command out here for a space of at least two years, previous to his taking up the mantle of the Commander-in-Chief at home when the time comes. Against the plan is said to be strong objection on the ground of its robbing the Indian army of its best and most glorious prize; but no Indian officer, we fancy, would grudge the Duke of Connaught a two-year's term of the office, as it would be certain to be to the advantage of the Indian army eventually.

VALUABLE COINS.—Mr. Chas. J. Rodgers, Archæological Surveyor, Punjab Circle, has just finished cataloguing the coins purchased by Captain de Laessoe in the Afghan Boundary Commission. The coins that are of numismatic value, over 2,500 in number, have been sent to the Indian Museum, whence duplicates will be sent to the Lahore Museum. Over 2,000 coins were valueless. Some very rare and valuable coins will be sent to the British Museum if the Trustees of the Indian Museum consent to the recommendations made.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, AUG. 11.

The Lushai expeditionary force will commence operations immediately on the conclusion of the rains, and will co-operate with the Chin field force, moving from Burma. The primary object will be to open up the intervening country between India and Burma, and to bring into civilised subjection the various wild frontier tribes. The Lushai chief, Lingpunga, is expected to carry out his threatened raid into the Tunghi valley early in September. The captives who succeeded in escaping after the last raid into the Tunghi valley give a terrible description of the atrocities perpetrated. The children were ruthlessly butchered, and all those who were unable to keep up with their captors in their rapid eight days' march were deliberately murdered. These cruelties are the result of the somewhat injudicious clemency displayed during the punitive expedition of 1871-2, when this tribe was specially excepted from reprisals and punishment. Such shocking brutalities, inflicted on British subjects, call for prompt and stern punishment. Vandula, the most powerful of the southern Howlong chiefs, is reported to be dying. His death will probably remove all active opposition on the part of these tribes.

The Chinese Ampa persists in the claim of Chinese suzerainty over Sikkim, and the negotiations are therefore practically closed. Mr. Hart will now return to China, re infectâ. The Indian Government continues to maintain a small garrison in Sikkim, and will preserve its present attitude of passive protection, unless the tribes should initiate any renewed movement of aggression, in which event the Government would have no alternative but that of despatching a military force into Tibet, in order to compel the Tibetans to arrange peace on a permanent basis.

The Gilgit Political Agency has been formally re-established. Captain Durand arrived in Gilgit on July 27, and proceed thence to Hunza. The Cashmere Rifles will garrison Gilgit, and this arrangement will operate as another connecting-link in the system of frontier defence.

Forty Native regiments have been armed with Martini rifles. Eleven batteries have been equipped with the new 12-pounder breechloading guns, but the carriages are too light to resist the recoil. The three Commanders-in-Chief have each offered a cup, to be shot for this season by the batteries in their respective commands.

The latest telegram from Madras reports that the condition of Ganjam is improving. The imports of food grain for the week amounted to 824 tons, and the local stocks to 1,200 tons. There were on the village relief lists 40,900 children, 17,800 women, and 10,600 men, and the number fed in the relief kitchens was 11,300. The deaths from cholera numbered 479.

Sir John Edgar has returned from his tour of relief inspection through the Orissa districts now suffering from scarcity. The distress it is estimated will last till November. Special officers have been deputed to control the relief works, and a grant of Rs. 30,000 has been sanctioned for the purchase of rice from Cuttack. In Daspulla 150 deaths are reported from starvation. An official summary has been published of the Lieutenant-Governor's tour in North Behar. The prospects would be fairly satisfactory save for the damage caused by heavy floods. In Durbhunga all anxiety is removed and the relief works are being closed. In Soorsund and Parihar gratuitous relief will be continued. In Mozufferpore the number in receipt of gratuitous relief is increasing. In Chamanorun extended arrangements have been made for gratuitous relief. Very severe floods are reported at Mozufferpore. A large portion of the city is under water, and the bridge at Akraghat has been partially carried away.

The indigo and other crops have suffered severely throughout the Chamanorun district. The Gopigunge Bund has been breached and a factory and Rs.9,00,000 worth of indigo were destroyed.

The final section of the Mysore State Railway was opened by the Maharajah on Monday. This will connect Mysore by direct railway communication with Bombay. The Maharajah, after the ceremony, entertained eighty Europeans at a banquet given in honour of the occasion. The Patiala-Bhatinda Railway has been completed, and the last link of the Indian Midland Railway Company system is finished, affording through communication from Jhansi to Manikpur, on the East Indian Railway.

It is in contemplation to tax Indian beer on the same scale as English beer.

The Government has directed that the Merchandise Marks Act shall be construed by the Executive Officers with careful liberality, so as to avoid interfering unduly with legitimate commerce. The Secretary of State, in his reply to the memorials forwarded by the Viceroy, protesting against the continuance of English duties on imported silver plate, acknowledges the letters from the Calcutta Trades Association and the Bengal and Bombay Chambers of Commerce. He entirely agrees with the sentiments expressed on this important matter, and he has caused further representations to be addressed to the Treasury on the subject.

An Official Secrets Bill, on the same lines as those of the English Act, will be introduced shortly into the Legislative Council at Simla.

The proposal to despatch the Bombay mail on Sundays is strongly opposed by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, and a public meeting will be convened to memorialise the Secretary of State if the Government persists in the suggested change.

Lord Reay will visit the Viceroy at Simla on the 24th inst., and Lord Connemara will go there ten days later. After his visit to Simla Lord Connemara will return to Madras early in November to make preparations for the reception of Prince Albert Victor, who is expected about November 20th.

None of the corrupt Bombay officials have yet been dismissed, and the public is anxiously awaiting the Secretary of State's despatch. The Bombay Times states on trustworthy information that the India Office authorities support the Judge's protest against the illegality of maintaining in office persons avowedly venal and corrupt. A public meeting of the Parsee community to protest against the official condemnation of that race contained in the Bombay Government's despatches will be held forthwith at Bombay.

The Government's resolution on educational reform is expected to be issued shortly. It is proposed to raise as far as possible the standard of school discipline to that existing in the highest class of English public schools, with the special object of developing a manly, moral tone in the Native character. Efficient training colleges for teachers will form a prominent feature of the proposed scheme.

In a former telegram reporting a theft of arms from the Bombay Arsenal the word "burnisher" was erroneously converted into "barrister" in course of transmission.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, AUG. 11.

No further news has been received from Afghanistan of the Badakshan rebellion, but it is believed to have been suppressed. The Ameer's future movements are unknown, and he shows no present intention of leaving Mazar. The Governor of Candahar will shortly visit Chaman in order to inspect personally and report to the Ameer upon the proposal to construct a terminal station six miles beyond Chaman. The frontier line has never been definitely settled, and the Government is anxious to induce the Ameer to consent to the delimitation being fixed in the plains, at the foot of the Khojak slope.

Fighting is reported to have taken place between Umra Khan and the Khan of Barghola. Umra Khan lost sixteen men killed, and was forced to retire to Shahzadagai.

It is rumoured that Ayoob Khan has escaped into Afghanistan, but the Government has received no official information to that effect.

BURMA.

RANGOON, AUG. 10.

The French Consulate at Mandalay has been definitely closed, and the Vice-Consul of France at Rangoon will henceforth take charge of French interests throughout Burma. The Rangoon Gazette remarks that France has thus tacitly admitted that the annexation of Upper Burma has practically extinguished her interests in that region. Besides a few French priests and nuns, there are now three Frenchmen in Upper Burma, two of whom are officers in the military police. It may be remembered that in 1885 the intrigues of M. Haas, then French Consul in Mandalay, largely contributed to bring about the invasion and annexation of Upper Burma.

Grants of 10,000 acres of land in Upper Burma have been offered to planters, on very favourable terms, but subject to the condition that 90 per cent. of the cultivators settled on the land shall be imported from Behar or Chota Nagpore. This proviso, due to the direct orders of the Government of India, is singularly injudicious. The number of immigrants coming from India must from the circumstances of the case be too limited to have any material influence in lessening the distress in the congested districts in India. On the other hand, it can hardly fail to arouse bitter feelings of resentment among the Burmans to find themselves excluded by the action of the Government from the best and most fertile portions of their country, in favour of a race which they hate and despise.

Since publicity was given to the terms of the circular issued by Mr. Copleston, Deputy Commissioner of Myingyan, requiring Burmese signs of respect to be given to officials, the Chief Commissioner has announced that the circular was issued without his knowledge or approval. The circular, however, was in force for months, during which time it was practically left to every military policeman to interpret it and carry it out as he thought fit. Such a system necessarily produced the gravest abuses, and opened a wide door for petty tyranny of the worst kind. While it is satisfactory to find that the Chief Commissioner refuses to sanction such proceedings, the incident well illustrated the loose system of administration which now prevails in Upper Burma. It shows the necessity for some further and fuller supervision of the subordinate Courts and officials, especially at present, when very wide powers are intrusted to altogether inexperienced officers. The matter proves the necessity for the appointment of a Judicial Commissioner for Upper Burma.

The Magwe and Katha districts of Upper Burma are still disturbed. The reports from the other districts are more favourable.

The inquiry opened at Mandalay into the case of the tattooed woman appears to have been practically narrowed to the question whether the tattooing was carried out by the orders of the district superintendent who is accused. The facts that the woman was tattooed, and that the operation was performed by policemen are said to have been established.

DISTRESS IN ORISSA.

CALCUTTA, WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

Sir John Edgar, who has been deputed by the Bengal Government to inspect the condition of the Orissa Tributary States, a cluster of nineteen dependant territories with a population of over a million souls, found matters generally more favourable than had been expected.

In Daspalla, however, which is a poor State, the relief measures which were adopted by the Chief proved insufficient, and 150 deaths from starvation are reported. Sufficient relief measures have therefore now been arranged.

THE FAMINE IN GANJAM.—The following telegram has been received at the India Office from the Governor, Madras, dated Tuesday, concerning the condition of Ganjam for the week ending Aug. 3: "The season continues very favourable, the rainfall has been heavy, and the general average for nineteen stations is 2.46 inches during the week. Up to date the average for the district is 18 inches, as compared with the normal average of 15½ inches. Prices show a tendency to fall, the average for rice being 10.10 seers, and for ragi 17.81 seers per rupee. The numbers on large works are 5,695; on small works, 5,533. The numbers on gratuitous relief are 79,502, of whom 11,534 are men, 19,374 women, and 48,594 children. Seventy-three relief circles have been constituted and 56 kitchens established. The imports by sea amount to 246 tons, those by land to 232 tons, and the returns are not yet complete. The deaths from cholera are 421.

DISTRESS IN MOZUFFERPORE.—A correspondent writes to the Indian Planter's Gazette:- "Just to give Sir Steuart Bayley an idea of the distressful (?) state of the down-trodden peasantry of Tirhoot, I may say that I caught the sheep boy of our Mutton Club, whose pay is Re. 1-8 a month, stealing the sheep's oats, so I ran him in. He employed five mookhtars to defend him at Rs. 2 each. This with As. 8 each for power-of-attorney, cost him Rs. 12-8. He is the only son of his mother, and her profession is—begging. The Behar peasant, like Todgers' can come, it strong when he likes."

Apropos of the leper question, it may not be generally known, remarks the Lahore paper, that the disease is very prevalent among certain of the Hill tribes, and is frequently met with at centres to which hill people resort. Dehra Doon especially, for instance, was so infested with lepers, that the authorities there long since established an asylum for them. Nearly a quarter of a century ago the Government of India deputed Colonel Marshall on special duty to write a report on the Todas of the Neilgherries; and if we are not mistaken, the Colonel discovered that leprosy existed among these aborigines. On completing his report on this almost extinct race, the Colonel was deputed to report on the custom of polyandry that existed among various of the Himalayan tribes, and Colonel Marshall not only found that polyandry flourished amongst all the Hindoo or idol worshipping hill men, but he traced the widespread leprosy to the custom of polyandry. Anyone who has lived continuously at a hill station is aware of the fact that a family of brothers will marry one wife, and while one remains in his village with the wife, the other brothers scatter themselves in various directions in quest of service, &c. Thus the Pahari jhampani or tindal will, after about six months' service, ask for leave to go home and put in his period of domesticity, at the same time offering a brother as his substitute.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

INDIAN RAILWAY POLICY.

(Statesman.)

The difficulty of finding new sources of revenue in India is so great that the abandonment of our railway revenue to private Companies is wanton and almost profligate. Instead of handing over this source of income to private Companies it ought to be jealously retained by the State, which can raise money just as cheaply in the open market as the financiers of the city, before whom there is a tendency, both here and in England, to bow down. The view we advocate has been held for years, by men both inside and outside the Public Works department, but so slight is the importance given to official opinions in India that the few words spoken by Sir Edward Watkin, after a winter visit to India, are likely to carry more weight, we fear, than the repeated utterances of Sir G. Molesworth and other experienced servants of the Government.

It is certainly remarkable how much the views of men change with their interests. Colonel Dickens, as Secretary to the Government of India, was justly regarded as a most trustworthy adviser; but General Dickens as Chairman at home of the Bengal Central, and the Bengal and North-Western Railways, though an excellent advocate for the Companies, is the last person to whom the Government should listen. The Bengal Central, as our readers may remember, was the first private railway company established in India. The Rothschilds and Barings ushered it in, with a great flourish of trumpets. It was to pay immensely, and to be the herald of similar private undertakings throughout the country. But somehow or other, the receipts, although exactly corresponding with those that Captain Rathbone had estimated, fell far short of the estimates which the promoters chose to put forward, and the line did not pay. The advantages of private enterprise under such auspices as those of the Messrs. Barings and Rothschilds were then very conspicuously shown. They had been deceived, they declared, by the Government, and the Government—that is to say the India Office—with the respectful deference necessarily shown to great financial firms of such importance, granted the Company a guarantee to sustain their so-called private enterprise. The same line precisely is now again being worked by the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company for a somewhat similar purpose. The same chairman, our excellent friend General Dickens, is the exponent of this policy; and behind him the same distinguished firms of the Barings and Rothschilds. At the recent meeting of their shareholders, General Dickens was to the front, preaching upon the same text as in the case of the Bengal Central Railway Company. On this occasion, however, we are told that the Government has unduly lowered the rates for traffic, and so the B. and N.-W. Railway is injured in a very peculiar way. The goods traffic transferred from the Bengal and N.-W. Railway to the East Indian, gives to the latter, he says, a net profit of Rs. 6,72,000, while the B. and N.-W. Railway gains but a net profit of Rs. 4,91,400. "That is to say,"—using General Dickens' words, "the Government of India has received from the traffic in goods on the one line more than our shareholders have. This is a strong reason for some favour being shown to this Company, irrespective of its claims as a pioneer company of private enterprise in India." But somehow or other the General forgot to say that the Bengal and North-Western Railway is but 274 miles long, while the points of its connection with the E. I. Railway, namely, Mogul Serai and Digha Ghat, are respectively 460 and 332 miles from Howrah; and that longer leads must necessarily give larger receipts for the same tonnage of goods. General Dickens himself will admit, we think, that the omission is not unimportant. Here, then, is the result of the private enterprise that has such heavy claims upon us. Whenever a Company thinks that it can squeeze the Government—in other words the people of India—it sets to work to do so. In the one case, a plea is put forward which no one can possibly admit to be sound, and the Bengal Central Railway gets a guarantee. In the other, the Bengal and North-Western Railway, which after but a few years opening is paying 3·5 per cent, on every £100 stock, has a grievance that is purely fanciful, and yet claims State favour. And with the Rothschilds and Barings at their back and the India Office at their feet, India will in all likelihood have to pay. "Heads I win, tails you lose." This is the policy of these Companies, and for their shareholders a very admirable policy. General Dickens, of course, hints at the favour to be shown to a line paying more by nearly one half per cent. than English Consols. It is to be an Aaron's rod. It is to absorb other lines—Government lines that pay, or are likely to pay well if extensions are made. For you, Government the shells—for us, the Company, the oyster. He is quite frank. He points to the absorption of the Rajputana-Malwa by the Bombay-Baroda Railway, and says, "See how it pays."

Surely the question that the Government of India has to consider is—not to "See how it pays," but to "see whom it pays." It should take care that in future it is the Government who is that happy person—in other words, the people of India. The truth is that not only in loss of income, but in another and very important respect, the absorption of the Rajputana Railway by a private Company, was a serious mistake. So long as the R. M. Railway was in the hands of Government it controlled the rates both to Bombay and Calcutta, and by lowering them on the Rajputana railway at a critical period the Government compelled a corresponding reduction on the E. I. Railway, which it could not otherwise have effected, much as it was to the advantage of Calcutta and the obstinate Railway itself. The lesson to be learnt from the incident is—that the Government, being now the owner of the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, should on no account part with it, but that an extension should be made towards Calcutta independently of the E. I. Railway, so that the control of the rates over the whole line may remain vested in Government hands. That is the minor lesson. The major is—that the Railways of India should, as Sir Edward Watkin says, belong to the State, and not to private Companies. And with such credit as India enjoys, there is no difficulty in that policy. But there is grave responsibility on those who do not adopt it.

THE LEPROSY QUESTION.

(Pioneer.)

The Government of India seem likely to obtain some curious views on the leprosy question as a result of the publication of their draft Bill dealing with that difficult subject. The vernacular newspapers have begun to discuss the provisions of the Act, and it is almost needless to say that many of them are stoutly opposed to legislation in any shape. Thus the Dainik (Calcutta) writes:—"You are going to force men into jail who have committed no crime in this life. For the word 'asylum' we use 'jail,' as a person placed in the asylum will not on any account be allowed to come out. It would be better to relieve the lepers by hanging than by putting them in jail in this way." The same paper admits that Government should provide asylums for those who voluntarily wish to enter them, but it protests against arresting those who walk about publicly; and it scorns the idea that leprosy is a danger to the health of the mass of the people, "for if the disease had been infectious the whole earth would have been filled with lepers by this time." The religous prejudices of the Hindus are also played upon, in the contention that "lepers are suffering by reason of sins committed in a previous life, and according to the Shastras they have a right to make atonement in this life, and can therefore perform religious ceremonies." The insinuation seems to be that their religion will not be respected in the asylums, though the Government have specially provided that segregation shall not involve interference with a leper's religion in the smallest degree:—and looking to the social excommunication which the patient usually undergoes from his fellows it is not apparent how he will suffer from entering an asylum. Inasmuch as the Hindu high priest, who has given such support to Lady Dufferin's Fund, has pronounced in favour of steps being taken to check leprosy, these mischievous utterances should not have much effect; but it is a sign of the times that any and every proposal of Government is now opposed by a certain class of native writers. The leprosy question bristles with difficulties, and effective legislation will not be an easy matter; but we trust that the Government will not be deterred from taking action by attacks such as that of the Dainik.

INDIAN GOLD-MINING.

It is now twelve years since the modern history of gold-mining in India had its commencement. Urged by the fall in silver and the enthusiasm of Lord Lytton, experts then began seriously to turn their attention to the possibilities of reopening the old mines in the Madras Presidency, which, undoubtedly, centuries back, had yielded rich harvests of the precious metal. An experienced engineer from Australia came over and inspected the auriferous districts. His report was an enthusiastic one, the most brilliant prospects being held out as to the richness and wide distribution of the ore. His accounts were over-coloured. They did far more harm than good, and what followed was to be anticipated. A couple of vulgar swindlers, Archer and Thomas by name, tried to float a batch of rotten companies in Bombay, and when we succeeded in exposing their knavery they levanted, carrying all their "swag" with them. At home money was abundant, and a syndicate of Manchester capitalists bought up deserted coffee estates by the dozen, and in the twinkling of an eye rechristened them as gold mines and transferred them to public companies. Promoters made fortunes by selling out of concerns they knew to be "sells" as rapidly as possible. Agents grew rich on commissions for the purchase of costly and useless machinery, which in some cases was, it is said, too cumbersome to reach its destination. Out here the investors were warned in time; but on the London Stock Exchange a wild speculative mania set in, Indian gold mining companies were launched by the score, and the shares ran up to an absurd figure. The inevitable crash soon came, and, it being impossible for the "bitten" public to winnow out the good from the utterly worthless properties, the industry was discredited, and the whole group of shares fell to the beggarly price of a few coppers, or at most sixpences, apiece. Then when people began to recriminate on each other some odd things transpired. When the mania first set in the assays on the promoters' samples of quartz made in the Bombay Mint gave the most wonderful returns of gold. But when the quartz actually dug out of the first mines was sent down by the engineers in charge not a trace of gold was to be discovered. This, we believe, to be a fact, and at this remote period it is no part of our business to explain the mystery. The years which immediately followed the disaster did not result in public confidence being restored. Only one or two properties continued to be worked, and from these the results were for a long time most meagre. The fact is, the miners were on a wrong tack altogether. They simply scratched away at the shallow, played-out workings of their predecessors in far back centuries. But at last it dawned on the minds of the few honest experts, who still clung to their belief in the possibilities of Indian gold-mining, that deep-sinking, as adopted in Australia and America, might be attended with very different results. But the industry was so completely discredited among the investing public at home that there seemed no hope that the necessary capital for operations on such a scale could be raised. It is a not unromantic fact that at this moment of wavering the whole future of Indian gold-mining turned on a balance of some £13,000, which the Mysore Company had in hand. The momentous question was whether the shareholders should divide this sum, and "cut" their losses, or make one more bid for fortune. The vote was in favour of the latter alternative; and from that date down to the present the out-turn of Indian gold has been upwards of half a million sterling.

A period of years was, of course, necessary before results on such a scale could be even imagined by the most enthusiastic. However, for the past three years the Mysore Gold Mining Company have paid up a dividend of over 20 per cent., and their shares have gone up from £1 to about £6, figures which speak for themselves. Two other companies—the Nundydroog and the Ooregum—have also now joined the dividend-paying list, and their shares are likewise at a premium. Moreover, some other companies are steadily working their way to the goal of profits exceeding expenses; but for our present purpose of showing the progress of the industry we shall confine ourselves to the three dividend-paying companies. A table of figures is the clearest and concisest way of indicating the advance. The following shows the number of ounces of gold won in the first six months of the present year:—

	Mysore.	Nundydroog.	Ooregum.
January	2,331	839	581
February	3,038	927	394
March	3,249	1,132	514
April	3,872	1,255	485
May	3,889	520	1,353
June	4,275	498	1,427

Now, these figures show all but continuous progress. The returns for May for Mysore were incorrectly telegraphed home as 2,869 oz. This caused a temporary decline; but when the figures were corrected to 3,889 oz., the decline in the shares was subsequently recovered and advanced. The figures for June only reach us this morning. For the same month of May Nundydroog suffered a severe drop, but this was quite anticipated, as a fault in the gold-bearing reef had been met with, and took some time to recover. Ooregum, it will be seen, however, has for the months of May and June advanced by leaps and bounds.

One point of immense importance is that as these mines get deeper and deeper the quartz is growing richer and richer. In other words, fewer tons of quartz have to be crushed and manipulated to get the same amount of gold. This means an increasingly greater proportion of profits to working expenses. It is well known that, roughly, 1 oz. of gold recovered from every ton of quartz raised covers the cost of production. The June returns for Ooregum show a yield of more than 2 oz. to the ton. Some of the assays made on the Ooregum property have shown 4 to 7½ ounces of gold to a ton of quartz—a return that cannot be beaten anywhere except in the case of a few of the recently discovered South African deposits. These rich assays have all been got at the deepest sinkings in the mines. Some Australian gold mines are worked to the depth of over 2,500 feet, and as no Indian mine has reached 600 feet it is clear we have not nearly yet reached the limit of likely productiveness. Deep sinking, as we have before remarked, has proved the chief secret of success in recent gold-producing efforts in India. Another important factor is rock-drilling. This work has to advantage of being effectively carried on by cheap native labour under European supervision, and as some of the rock in the Colar field is extremely hard, especially on the Nundydroog property, rock-drilling has rendered operations possible where they would have been impossible before. It has also to be borne in mind that the result up to the present effected in the Colar field by the three companies who hold the lead have been from seven shafts only—three in the Mysore property, three in the Ooregum, and one in the Nundydroog. But there are from fifty to sixty other shafts, both on and around these properties, now in process of being sunk, which are rapidly approaching the level of rich gold-bearing quartz. So it is literally impossible to estimate what, in the course of a few years hence, the gold-productiveness of the Colar field will be. We have not the remotest desire to over-estimate the position of affairs, but the proved results augur well that greater things are yet to come.

THE SILVER PLATE DUTIES.

(Statesman.)

It will be in the recollection of our readers that in the last utterance of the Lords of the Treasury in regard to the duties on silver plate they refused to pledge themselves to any abolition of that impost. They were willing, however, in the fulness of their hearts, to consent to an equitable adjustment of the duties, so as to give the home manufacturer no advantage over the foreign producer, which meant that they were ready, on sufficient reason being shown, themselves to pocket the 3d. per ounce allowed as rebate to the English manufacturer, and so make it 1s. 6d. all round. The fact showed clearly that the spirit of the policy adopted was to take all they could and give nothing that they could on any pretext retain.

While thus magnanimously willing to abolish the rebate the same Treasury Lords could not see the justice of any claim whatever for a refund of the money in their coffers. The apparition of a drawback, in the prospect of their abolishing the plate duties, arose as a terrible vision "aggravating" the loss of revenue from the abolition. This drawback, it is hardly necessary to explain, meant the refund of a duty already paid. As the duty is paid beforehand, if the duty were abolished it would put the unsold portion in stock at great disadvantage compared with the fresh articles coming into the market free of duty. Indeed, it would be an effectual embargo on the sale of the former. Hence the refund. The excise duty on salt in this country is levied simultaneously with the sale of the article. So long as the salt finds no sale it pays no duty. Of course it is under a system of bond ; and we do not see why the same system should not be adopted in England in regard to silver ware. It would relieve the Government of the necessity for any refund, and clear it of the stigma of levying duty on a commodity that may never be disposed of. Apart, however, from all such considerations whatever, and looking at the matter as it actually stands, there is no avoiding the dilemma which we have pointed out as resulting from a sudden abolition of the duty. Mr. Gladstone saw this fully when, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, he had in contemplation a gradual reduction of the duty, say at the rate of 3d. per ounce annually, that would "not disturb sensibly the course of trade." In other words, he wished to minimise the anomaly, and make the injustice as little felt as possible. This is policy, we allow, but not upright statesmanship. Why retain at all a tax on articles no longer dutiable?

We note also that when Mr. Gladstone was considering in 1881 the possibility of abolishing the silver duties—which idea, however, he finally abandoned—he estimated the probable claim for drawback at £170,000, or three-and-a-half years' revenue. The case, however, is very different to-day from what it was then, as pointed out by the Trades' Association of Calcutta in its letter to Government of the 29th March last, which appeared some time ago in our columns. The Committee expressed their belief that the sum would at the present day be inconsiderable, as owing to the prevailing uncertainty in the matter of the duties, for some time past, "few large stocks were held, and manufacturers had worked only to order." The Association knowing, however, and feeling keenly the reluctance of the English treasury to refund any amount however "inconsiderable," offered another alternative for which they cited a precedent, and by which even this necessity would be avoided. They suggested that no drawback should be paid at all. Why should silver be treated differently from any other commodity? When the Government of India some years ago removed the import duties of 7½ per cent. no drawback was paid, although there were large stocks of silver plate and jewellery held in Calcutta upon which duty had been paid. This, we allow, was certainly going very far, for it naively recommended in effect that the same injustice should be inflicted on the British manufacturer as was inflicted on the weak and all-suffering Indian. Perhaps the Association wanted to see how John Bull would like it ; or how he would take it. They added the significant remark—"Nor did the question ever arise!" We should have a dozen questions in Parliament if the duty on silver was abolished and no drawback allowed, and Mr. Hickie would probably say that it is no use crying for the moon. In dealing with a policy so shamelessly unjust, and so meanly avaricious, we should be prepared to accept even small blessings, and sacrifice much in order to secure the main object.

Subsequent events certainly seem to have justified the Trades' Association's estimate of the financial morality of the English treasury. For in a recent letter to Government by the Madras Trades' Association attention is drawn to a communication to the London Times of 4th January last, by Mr. E. J. Watherston, which sets forth some striking facts. As foreign plate of Oriental design, although of sterling quality, is now exempted from the necessity of being Hall-marked, subject only to the payment of the customs duty of 1s. 6d. per ounce—Messrs. Orr and Sons of Madras sent some Indian plate to try the English market. The design having been too Oriental, "Native goods being unattractive to English buyers," the firm wished to return the goods to India, assuming "that the same drawback of duty would be allowed to them as to British silversmiths, when exporting their goods to India." But the customs and treasury refused "to recognise the articles," even on oath, as required from British exporters, and so Messrs. Orr and Sons had to lose £24 or £25 by their enterprise. Now, we ask seriously, could injustice itself go further? This is not even consistent meanness, for the Indian manufacturer is not allowed the very drawback which is granted to the British silversmith. Let our readers moreover note the shameful pretence upon which the refund was refused to Messrs. Orr. The English treasury is not unwilling to allow the drawback on silver articles which cannot sell in England, and must be returned to India. They do not refuse to refund the duty, only they require proof that it has been paid. How are they to know that the articles declared by Messrs. Orr and Sons are the identical articles which paid the duty? and therefore refused to recognise the articles as duty paid. But Messrs. Orr and Sons offered the very same evidence that satisfies the authorities in the case of English silversmiths : they offered to swear to the identity. But that would not do. There is one law for the British subject at home, and another for the British subject in India.

THE TRADE OF INDIA WITH CHINA.

(Madras Mail.)

The commercial intercourse of India and China is of very great consequence to this country, especially in connection with the trade in opium, which at present contributes so large a portion of India's revenue that one dare hardly think of how the vacuum will be filled if ever that trade passes away. And yet there is no concealing the ominous fact that the trade is on the decline, chiefly because the taste for foreign opium in China is languishing, preference being given to the locally produced drug. The palate exercises a great influence on commerce, as the gradual ousting of China by India and Ceylon teas in the British and other markets is showing at the present time ; and taste rises loftily superior to the exigencies of Budgets, and to the restrictions of Customs. The China-produced drug is said to be of coarser make and taste than its Indian rival ; but it is relatively cheap ; and it meets the requirements of the "masses," if not perhaps of the "classes" in China better than the foreign article can do. Other things being equal, especially the matter of cost to the consumer, Indian opium would still hold its own in China against all possible competition. But other things are not equal, and thus it is that the value of the exports of opium from India to China declined from £13,123,489 (taking the rupee at par for the sake of comparison) in 1879 to £8,684,211 in 1887. These figures show a very grave shrinkage, and it is no consolation, though it is interesting to know, that China is experiencing a still more serious vicissitude of trade in regard to tea, owing mainly to the rivalry of India. In 1872, for example, the United Kingdom received from China 160 millions of lbs. of tea, valued at £10,879,038, and from India 16½ millions of lbs. of tea, worth £1,398,106 ; but in 1887 it took but 119¾ millions of lbs. from China, worth £4,641,869, and imported 84½ millions of lbs. from India, worth £4,211,051. The rapid development of the tea industry contributes directly and indirectly to the material prosperity of India, so that may be taken as a set off against the decline of the opium trade. But it fails to compensate the Treasury for the loss of revenue that is essential to the well-being of the Empire.

Opium has always been a bruised reed; yet Finance Ministers have leaned heavily upon it, trusting that it would not break in their time ; and they have even been parties to the sacrifice of import duties, that no one in India felt, as a sop to Manchester. The sop was accepted, but it was soon forgotten, and now Manchester is clamouring for the application of some restraint on the manufacturing industry and development of the country which was so grossly wronged in the vain hope of conciliating herself. She has cause for alarm, for India has taught herself how to manufacture cotton goods for her own and for China's use. India has not been agressive; but by the force of circumstances she has become a very formidable rival of Manchester. In 1876 there were 47 cotton mills in this country, equipped with 1,100,112 spindles, and 9,139 looms; in 1887-88 there were 95 mills, with 2,302,982 spindles, and 18,415 looms. These mills do not yet, and possibly never will, produce the fine class of goods; but they produce the coarser cloths and yarn that the "masses" require. Moreover, the Bombay-spun yarn is supplanting Manchester yarn in China, because it is found to be the better-wearing thread when woven into cloth. In 1872 China received cotton goods from the United Kingdom valued at £7,089,128, and from India cotton goods valued at £73,054. So the British-made goods were almost one hundred times as valuable as the Indian-made goods. In 1887, or only fifteen years afterwards, China imported British cotton goods of the value of £6,431,262, and Indian cotton goods of the value of £3,328,605. So the British-made goods were then only twice as valuable as the Indian-made goods. The value of the Indian cotton goods imported into China doubled between 1883 and 1887, or in four years, and there is every prospect of a continuous increase. Japan, to the east of China, is cutting in for a share of China's cotton goods trade, and has already about 300,000 spindles at work; so between India and Japan the outlook for Manchester's trade with China is an anxious one. The desire of Manchester to impose British factory legislation on India is therefore intelligible enough; but how will Manchester check commercial and manufacturing energy in Japan? The trade in Indian cotton goods with other countries in Southern Asia than China and Japan, and with Eastern Africa, and Burma is still on a comparatively small scale; but there are abundant indications that it will grow apace; and if Madras is on the alert she will command a large share of the trade with the last-named country. The evil days when dacoit leaders used to boil alive their captives who declined, or were unable, to pay black mail, are ended; but time is needed to efface the recollection of them from the minds of a people who had from time immemorial regarded dacoity as a custom of the country which must be endured. The tranquillity that is now being given by the British to the sorely harassed land is not yet understood; it is too good to be true, or permanent, so the people think, and they cannot readily pursue pacific avocations conducive to material prosperity that are contrary to their habits. But as soon as they begin to make this new departure the great fertility of their virgin soil will afford them the means for raising their standard of living, and they will be conscious of new wants that the Indian mills will be capable of supplying.

India is not yet as important a constituent of China as is the United Kingdom, but she will probably soon be so. In 1885 the total value of the British import and export trade with China was about 19 millions, and that of the Indian trade 13½ millions; but in 1887 the value of the former had fallen to 17½ millions, while that of the latter had advanced to 15½ millions, notwithstanding the falling off in the opium trade. Thus the trade with China is now equivalent to about 9½ per cent. of the total value (164¾ millions) of India's import and export trade, exclusive of treasure, and renders the Celestial Empire the best customer that India has after the United Kingdom. France comes next, with a trade of 9 millions, and then come the Straits Settlements, with a trade of 6 millions. So the value of India's trade with the Straits and China is 21½ millions, or about a fourth the value of her trade with the United Kingdom. The opium trade with China is, in all probability, doomed to extinction, and a very dark spot in the fiscal system will then be obliterated, though how the loss of revenue is to be made good has yet to be discovered; but trade that is beyond all reproach is on the increase, and possibly in the long run India will be able to regard the loss of revenue from opium with philosophic composure.

AN AQUATIC G. R.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The following are particulars of Mr. Abbott's ride on an alligator, in the words of an eye-witness:—

"It was in the rains, and we were up at Tewarreh Factory vats when the Jemedar told us that there was a huge alligator under the bridge of the river. Sending for a gun and a couple of bullets we went up to the bridge, and, sure enough, about twenty yards off, there was an enormous 'ghurial' some twenty feet long, with his head just visible above the water. A well-directed shot caught him between the eyes, and the brute, mortally wounded, plunged into deep water, rolling over and over, and was carried by the tide down towards the bungalow, which was some quarter of a mile off. Running to the vat-house Abbott seized a long rope lying there, and rapidly made a slip-knot in it, and, declaring he was not going to lose so lovely a skin, kicked off his boots, and, just as he was—in socks, breeches, and shirt—jumped into the river, giving me and a lot of Natives the other end of the rope to hold. He got well into the middle of the stream, and was quietly treading water, while we were all anxiously watching, when suddenly, within two feet of the swimmer, the alligator plunged straight up out of water, snout foremost, as alligators generally do when hit in the head. Without the least hesitation Abbott flung both arms right round the snout, and a regular rough-and-tumble ensued, I yelling to him at the top of my voice to drop it. Presently the brute's whole body appeared, and Abbott calmly mounted him, evidently trying the while to disengage the slip-knot, which had now got tight round his own arm, and to shove it over the brute's head.

"Then the alligator started swimming, and we followed down the bank, when, just as we were opposite the bungalow, he pulled dead up, brought his tail out of the water, and with a fearful side-sweep capsised Abbott, snapping at him as he fell. Then came another fight, such as I never wish again to see; the pair eventually disappearing beneath the water. We hauled away at the rope, thinking it was still attached to Abbott, when unexpectedly we saw him come up a few yards from the bank, evidently almost senseless. A Rajpoot peon jumped in and dragged his master up the slope. He was bleeding awfully, and was a gruesome sight. Shirt in ribbons, arms and chest torn all over, both hands badly maimed, and the right foot completely crushed. He came to at once, and only said 'The rope's safe over his nose;' and so it was, sure enough, for the natives to whom I had thrown the rope were now busily engaged in hauling the defunct saurian on shore.

"I never saw a man in such a mess; and, to add to the horror, down to the edge of the river, just as we had dragged up her half-killed husband, rushed his young wife, wringing her hands, and naturally half out of her wits with terror. While she was standing over him, and the servants were carrying him to the house, he started singing 'Home they brought her warrior dead.' A nice time of it we had out in a jungle with no appliances to tie the severed arteries, and with a patient who would insist in trying to get out of bed to see how the skinning of the alligator was getting on. We tried to hire kahars, but the whole country was under water, and they refused to budge from home; so we put him into a skampony and took him in to the doctor at Mozafferpore, taking from ten o'clock on Tuesday till seven the next morning to do the twenty miles. Nothing but his high spirit and total inability to give in kept him alive through that journey. He ought to have died from loss of blood, for the wounds burst out every time there was a bad jolt over the breaks in the road, and they were legion. And then the poison from the bites and danger of lockjaw would have been sufficient to settle any nervous fellow. Luckily, he has not got such a thing as nerves in his composition; hence, I suppose, his escape."

TOMMY ATKINS'S BEER.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The supply of malt liquor to British troops in India is at present rather a vexed question with the military authorities. It appears that Tommy Atkins has a palate which, in common with other people's, likes a change, and does not take kindly to an arrangement that compels it to taste a particular brand only. Some regiments prefer porter; some prefer beer; while others again have a partiality towards a mixture. There are also several regiments which have taken a rooted aversion to the malt liquor brewed in India; so much so, indeed, that in several cases the regimental authorities are obliged to send to England for a part of their requirements. This, of course, creates a difficulty. The Government has contracted to purchase from certain brewers in India all the malt liquor required for British troops; and Tommy Atkins has refused to drink it—not because he has turned total abstainer, but simply because he likes to drink other malt liquors which he can procure elsewhere. We do not say that the malt liquor brewed in this country is not good, nor that it would not satisfy a committee of experts; but it is very apparent that Tommy Atkins does not like it. In fact, it is so apparent, that one of the minor presidencies has proposed that, on the expiration of existing contracts, British corps should be allowed to make their own arrangements for purchasing malt liquor. The Government of India, however, are of opinion that the termination of existing contracts does not release the State from a strong moral obligation to renew them if the brewers continue to give satisfaction. The brewers might not be able to sustain any claim against Government in the law courts for not renewing their contracts, but they would undoubtedly have a grievance and a reasonable claim for compensation; for it is not to be supposed that they would have incurred a large initial expenditure if it were understood that the whole of their business was liable to come to an end at the expiry of the first contract, simply at the pleasure of the Government, and because it desired to enter on a new policy. We certainly agree with the Government of India in this, so far as the principle involved is concerned; and there cannot be the slightest doubt that this claim to compensation would be the inevitable result of the refusal to make fresh contracts. We believe that the policy laid down by the Government of India to be pursued in the future in the matter of malt liquor contracts is, instead of renewing existing contracts on the same lines, to invite tenders for fresh contracts—the Indian brewers being advised that a reduction of rates will be looked for and that the contracts will be for shorter periods. This is certainly the right course to follow, for it would be both unjust and unwise to throw over Indian brewers who have laid out their capital on a venture which would never have been risked had not the Government contracts been held out as a possible business. Brewing in India is at present hardly beyond its experimental stage; the many difficulties to be contended with, owing to climatic influences, are gradually being overcome, and the brewers themselves hope at no distant date to be able to compete with home consignments. It is probable that, during the next ten years, Indian brewers will be able to raise a private trade sufficient to repay them their initial outlay independently of Government contracts. And it will be time enough then, should the palate of Tommy Atkins still be so hard to please, to allow British corps to make their own arrangements for purchasing malt liquor.

BENGAL.

THE latest reports from the Patna Division show that the condition of most of the districts where scarcity have been felt has improved greatly since the commencement of the monsoon season; but in the Mozufferpore and Chumparun districts the rainfall has been too heavy, and has rather increased the distress than relieved it. Whereas elsewhere the rain has enabled agricultural operations to be commenced, which have drawn a large number of people from the relief works, in these districts agriculture is still at a standstill, and floods have interrupted communications, owing to which the prices of food-grains have risen. The Lieutenant-Governor, in a Resolution on the subject, recognises that further relief works will be necessary here, and also a considerable measure of charitable relief. His Honour was to have left Calcutta for Bankipore on Monday, going on from there about the 18th inst. to Dinapore and Mozufferpore, in order to visit the distressed districts.

THE following is the official report on the agricultural conditions and prospects in Bengal on the 9th inst.:—Ordinary monsoon weather prevails throughout the province, and ample rain has fallen in all districts except Balasore. A partial break in the rain appears to have set in, and will be beneficial to the crops. The excessive rain has caused damage to the crops on low lands in places in the Rajshahye and Dacca divisions, the damage being rather considerable in the south of Rungpore. Sowing of paddy and bhadoi crops is nearly completed, and transplanting of seedlings has begun. Prospects of early rice, jute, and sugarcane are promising. Indigo manufacture has begun, and the produce is expected to be fair, except in Midnapore and Chumparun. The price of rice remains high and steady throughout the province. The latest report regarding the affected tract in the Patna division shows that the attendance on relief works has fallen off considerably; but in Mozufferpore and Durbhunga, owing to interruption of communications caused by heavy rain, prices have risen almost to famine rates. In Chumparun anxiety is felt for the crops for want of fine weather, and destitution is said to be spreading.

MADRAS.

(July 20)

FROM the telegram despatched by the Madras Board of Revenue to the Government of India, giving a summary of the season reports for the week ending the 6th instant, we learn that the rainfall was good in Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Godavari, Kistna, Bellary, Nilgiris, Salem, and the West Coast; slight in Madras and Chingleput, and fair elsewhere. The crops generally are good, but withering in parts of Cuddapah, South Arcot and Tinnevelly. The people are suffering from want of rain or water in North Arcot, Trichinopoly, Coimbatore and Salem. The crops are damaged by excessive moisture in Vizagapatam, and blighted by insects in Coimbatore. The water supply is insufficient in Chingleput and Salem. Live stock are suffering badly, chiefly from rinderpest, in Tanjore, Kistna, Tinnevelly and Malabar. The prices are rising in eight districts, falling in six, and stationary in others. Cholera is severe in the three northern districts, but abating in Ganjam. The labourers employed on the last day of the week on Rushikulya works were 4,118, in Gopalpur canal 1,334, and on the ghat roads 1,879. The average daily number on drinking water tanks and wells were 5,039; on minor irrigation and other works were 3,055. The decrease is due to agricultural operations, and partly to floods in the Gopalpur canal. The number on village relief on June 29 was 27,163; fed in kitchens 2,907. No reliable estimate of stocks of food grains in Ganjam. The imports during the week by sea and land were 1,208 tons. General prospects are favourable, and continue to improve in Ganjam.

BOMBAY.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay season reports for the past week:—Rain general, but deficient, in parts of Deccan and Southern Mahratta Country, and sowing consequently retarded in parts of Nassik, Poona, Ahmednugger, Satara, Belgaum, and Dharwar. Standing crops good in parts of Shikarpore, Surat, Khandeish, Kolaba, and Belgaum. Bajri crop doing well in Ahmedabad, but insects damaging it in two talukas. Young crops also damaged by caterpillars in two talukas of Kaira. Transplantation progressing in Shikarpore, Surat, Tanna, and Kolaba. Fodder scarce in parts of Nassik, Ahmednugger, Dharwar, and Kattywar Water scarce in parts of Ahmednugger and Dharwar. Prices rising in Khandeish and two talukas of Nassik, and falling in Panch Mahals.

A MEETING of some of the leading Parsees of Bombay was held on Friday evening in the rooms of the Presidency Association to consider what steps should be taken to vindicate the community from the aspersions cast upon it in Mr. Ommaney's Note on the Crawford case. Nearly all the leading seths of the community were conspicuous by their absence, either from will or want of an invitation to attend the meeting. Among those present—and they were not many—were the Hon. Mr. Pherozshah M. Mehta, Messrs. Sorabjee Shapurjee Bengalee, C.I.E., Sorabjee Framjee Patel, Muncherjee N. Banajee, Khan Bahadoor M. C. Murzban, Messrs. Manockjee Burjorjee Minocher Homjee, K. N. Kabrajee, Framjee Dinshaw Petit, Limjee N. Banajee, &c. The proceedings were understood to be of a strictly confidential character. No definite resolution was come to with a view to any immediate action in the matter.

A MEETING of the subscribers to the Surgeon-General Sir W. J. Moore Memorial Fund was held on Wednesday evening at the Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital. Surgeon-General W. Cates presided, and there were present Dr. Hughes, Dr. Arnott, Dr. Kirtikar, Dr. S. Kantak, Dr. K. S. Engineer, and Dr. Gallagher, secretary. On the motion of Dr. Hughes, seconded by Dr. Kantak, it was unanimously resolved that Dr. Arnott be empowered to remit to England the equivalent of £115 in payment for the portrait of Surgeon-General Sir W. J. Moore. The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

CAPTAIN MARRIOTT, who was injured in the French railway accident a year ago, when his sister was killed, has, it appears, lost his lien on an appointment as Superintendent of Police in Bombay, which he formerly held. In consequence of this numerous promotions were on Thursday gazetted. Mr. H. G. Gell, though continuing to act as Deputy Commissioner in Bombay, becomes a Superintendent, third grade; Mr. F. L. Goldsmid, third grade; Mr. H. M. Gibbs, fourth grade; Mr. F. H. Warden, fifth grade; Mr. C. F. G. Lester, Assistant Superintendent, and Mr. J. A. J. Jardine, Assistant Superintendent, second grade.

During the past year twenty-eight new companies have been registered in Bombay under the Indian Companies Act. Of these sixteen were mills or presses; and there are now thirteen banking and twenty-five trading companies, 130 mills and presses, one planting and one mining and quarrying concern, six ice-manufacturing companies and forty-eight miscellaneous.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE inquiry into the charges brought against the Superintendent of the Naini Central Jail will be held by the magistrate of Allahabad on July 22nd. The proceedings will be private, and the decision will rest with the local Government, who presumably will deal with the matter by resolution.

THE Durbar troops and district police along the Bundelkhund and Chumbul borders of the Gwalior State have been granted extra pay for one and two months for their late success in suppressing dacoity. The officers also are to be promoted and presented with khilluts, for which purpose a durbar will shortly be held at Gwalior.

OWING to the severe rains of the last two or three days several landslips have occurred in Simla. The main road leading up to the new club was in a dangerous state on the evening of the 11th, and part of it collapsed in the night.

The club will celebrate its opening shortly, but the form of entertainment is under consideration.

BURMA.

(July 16.)

THE statement that the jade sale in Upper Burma realised Rs. 4,500 less than last year is contradicted. The sum actually realised was Rs. 52,500, against Rs. 48,000 in 1888.

As the garrison of Burma is under the direct control of the Madras Commander-in-Chief, the latter will be asked to submit to army headquarters a plan of operations on the Chin frontier in connection with the opening out of the Lushai country in the cold weather.

AN up-country paper writes:—The tattooed Burmese woman, about whom there was such a sensation in Mandalay and Rangoon a short time back, has been found. According to a correspondent, there is no brand but only "a faint illegible mark on the temple." The female alleges that the original branding was done by a European in 1886, and that the tattoo mark has now faded. The tattooer has also been found, and he, it appears, corroborates the woman's statement. The authorities are, however, no happier than they were before, as now that they have after a prodigious bother discovered the pair, they don't know what to do with them. The name of the tattooer, or the position he occupies, is not mentioned in the Burmese papers.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HEARTS OF OAK.*

There is a charm attaching to the experiences of sea life which is not to be found in the sister service. Why is this? In part, of course, the circumstance is due to the innate admiration which the English nation possesses of all that concerns the "great deep." Love of the sea, and, indeed, it may be said of water in any and every shape, is the birthright of the denizens en masse of our island home: the very alley children float "baby boats" along the gutter streams as the latter course down the alleys and bye-streets of the cities. Then, too, there is the stirring adventure which attaches to the doings of those who follow their profession on the mighty ocean. War or no war, there are storms, troubles, collisions, fires, accidents, and a thousand-and-one matters which make naval life so enjoyable to those who love excitement, and can appreciate Nature in her changeful mood. All this counts for much; but there is one reason, and perhaps more potent than all the rest combined, why the navy turns out more excellent "raconteurs" than the sister service. The members of the latter are dressed up in gorgeous uniforms, petted and coaxed by an all-indulgent society, caressed and humoured by the many; their heads must be somewhat more than human if they do not get turned—hence airs of affectation, conceit, arrogance, and the concomitant of "literary swash-buckling." Naval officers, on the contrary, are almost invariably modest, unaffected, and without pretensions; of course they like at times to be petted and admired—who is quite free from the vice of vanity?—but there is a plain, "devil-me-care" sort of way with them which, reflected in all their adventures, and in the style in which the tales are told, enchants where pride would repel and conceit disgust.

It may be gathered from the somewhat lengthy preamble that Admiral Winnington-Ingram's "Hearts of Oak" has won our approbation; commendation pure and unalloyed will be, we venture to think, the verdict of the public. There is much to attract—there are adventures without end; curious anecdotes, too, teem like ants in a nest; nor are "traveller's lies"—shall we give offence if we proclaim it—now and again wanting; as, for instance, when the sober-minded Admiral, perhaps at the time a thoughtless "middy," proclaims that in Monte Video the officers' horses, when extra pressed with hunger, used to devour each other's manes and tails! In short, there is a little of everything, and few works have appeared of late more calculated to amuse, and even, it ought to be said, to instruct. We wish it every success.

Colburn's United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for the current month shows itself to be still vigorous in its green old age. The "Naval Mobilisation and Manœuvres of '89," by a "Naval Journalist," is appropriate and well timed. This magazine has always been a popular one with the navy, and some of the best professional papers connected with that branch of the service have appeared in its columns. So long as that navy can show the world the display of power it did the other day at Spithead the question touched upon by Mr. Cooke, "Is the Fall of England Near? From a Foreign Point of View," can be very satisfactorily answered from a home point. "Notes on Military Saddling" and "Our Military Uniforms" will have, no doubt, fitting interest for the readers for whom they are intended. We fear that few military men take much interest to-day in the "Reorganisation of the Military System of the Netherlands," although Major Rieberstein's paper on that subject is a very readable one. For lighter reading, it is possible that "Defending the Cutcherry," by Ida Scott; "My First Bear," by Captain Wilmer; and Mr. Preston's "Adventure in Egypt" will be found more attractive. The present "Tommy Atkins" can in this number compare himself with the original "Tommy Atkins" as sketched by Major Harold Dillon. The "Naval and Editorial Notes" seem to be varied, topical, and expressing sound and sensible views.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for August keeps up the good name it has won for itself under its present able editor. The contents are varied and interesting, some besides having also a solid value for Service readers. Amongst these latter may be classed Rear-Admiral Colomb's contribution on "Naval Warfare" (continued), "Infantry," by Captain Gall; and Captain Willoughby's scientific and clever Paper on "Range Finding." The widow of Captain Mayne Reid, whose novels still retain their attraction for the young and old, tells the story of her late husband's connection with the Mexican war of 1847; Major-General Harris continues his exciting "Reminiscences of the Siege of Delhi," in which he himself played a conspicuous and gallant part; Irving Montague goes on with his delightful "Wanderings of a War Artist," and the editor himself gives another of his charming translations from the Swedish ballads of Runeberg. The number is also profusely and well illustrated.

TEA IN BURMA.—A contemporary says that Lieutenant H. Daly, Superintendent of the Northern Shan States, in his diary of his tour for the week ended the 27th of April, mentions that in nearly all the Taungbaing villages which he saw very extensive new clearings for tea cultivation had been made, and though the prices of paddy and rice were very high, but very little of it was grown. The people at present devote all their energies to tea cultivation, and they seem to have made up their minds that it is better to pay almost famine prices for imported grain than to grow paddy on ground which is capable of producing tea.

THE "MILD" HINDU.—A contemporary remarks:—"It must often strike the Western mind as wondrous strange what meagre provocation is required to stir the mild and inoffensive Hindu to perpetrate the most atrocious crimes. Here is a case in point. A man in Bhandara had a money claim against another with whom he had for some time lived. To obtain his dues he filed a suit, but it was dismissed, and he determined to take the law into his own hands. He conceived a most diabolical plot of murdering the nine persons whom he believed to have been instrumental in bringing about his discomfiture. Among them were the naib tehsildar who dismissed his suit, the police officer who declined to take the matter up as a police case, the debtor and his son, and five others who had refused to give evidence in his favour. Arming himself with a sword, he stole into the house of his debtor, whom, with his son, he decapitated while they lay asleep. He then treated similarly two of the men who would not appear as witnesses. In attempting to slay the fifth man the sword broke off at the hilt and the murderer ran away. But he was soon captured, tried, convicted and hanged."

PODOPHYLLIN IN THE HIMALAYAS.—The Lahore paper writes:—"Dr. George Watt, C.I.E., has made a discovery which seems likely to provide the hill tribes of the higher Himalaya with a lucrative trade, and to supply the medical profession with an abundance of podophyllin, a drug which, as many Anglo-Indians have good reason to know, is a valuable specific in disorders of the liver. Hitherto America has enjoyed a monopoly of the podophyllin plant (podophyllum peltatum), but the researches of Dr. Watt and the analysis by Dr. Hooper, Quinologist to the Madras Government, demonstrate that the Himalayan variety (podophyllum Emodi) yield three times as much of the valuable resin as the American root, and that it possesses the same medicinal properties. This valuable plant grows wild in the higher, rich and shady temperate forests from Sikkim to Simla, Kashmir, Hazara Tibet, the Kuram Valley, and Afghanistan. It is fairly plentiful on the northern forest-clad slope of the familiar Shalai hill, seen from Simla; on the almost equally well-known Nagkanda hill and in the Chumba State there are many mixed forests with their glades almost exclusively covered with this peony-rose-like herb. In his notes on the subject Dr. Watt remarks that it is surprising that the natives of India, who have discovered so many drugs, should have failed to detect the properties of the podophyllum root."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MR. WILLIAM DIGBY, C.I.E.

IT would appear that Mr. Bradlaugh is not to be left in undisturbed possession of his self-assumed office of "Member for India." Mr. William Digby, C.I.E., aspires to the honour of Indian grievance-monger also. An Anglo-Indian contemporary lately said of the former: "The situation is really getting very serious in regard to Mr. Bradlaugh. He is going apparently to be our 'friend' to such an extent that very soon the British public will come to recognise him as the great authority outside the Government on Indian affairs; and of course where the two authorities clash, the Government—a mere despotism always concerned to keep the truth concealed from the argus eyes of the great democracy—will be held convicted of wilful misrepresentation." We do not altogether share in this fear. There is safety for India in Mr. Bradlaugh's ignorance of all Indian questions. His performances in the House during the present session when he has endeavoured to call attention to his so-called Indian grievances have proved him to be a "wind-bag," and nothing more, so far as matters relating to that country are concerned; and it has been well said of him that plunging in ignorance into the tangled maze of Indian social and political problems he is inevitably doomed to misunderstand everything connected with India. His colleague or rival in Indian grievance-mongering—Mr. William Digby—cannot, however, boast of the same amount of ignorance on all Indian topics. Mr. Digby has been in India, and during his connection with the Madras press, and with the celebrated famine which made him a Companion of the Indian Empire, he had the opportunity of learning some hing about India and her wants. It is to be regretted that he has not turned his knowledge—and his abilities, which are undoubted—to better account than by joining his strength to Mr. Bradlaugh's weakness, in an endeavour to throw discredit upon British rule in the East. Such endeavour he has just made in publishing a pamphlet, entitled "India. The Queen-Empress's promises. How they are broken." This pamphlet is in the form of a letter occupying some thirty-five pages of folio, and addressed to the members of the Most Honourable the House of Commons. Starting with a scriptural quotation, "the Land trembleth and is in pain," he proceeds to show that the causes of this agony are Sir Lepel Griffin, Major Barr, Colonel Parry Nisbet, and last, but by no means least, Sir John Gorst. The first-named has the honour of occupying the chief place of abuse in Mr. Digby's diatribe. He is abused for the asserted mal-administration of the Gwalior State during the period he was agent to the Governor-General for Central India; he is accused of conniving at and supporting Major Barr's declared cruelties and unscrupulous actions in the Rewa State, and the false and calumnious charges brought by Mrs. Besant regarding Sir Lepel's conduct towards the Begum of Bhopal are reprodued and endorsed by Mr. Digby in this letter. Of the Begum he writes: "This is the lady-monarch whom Sir Lepel Griffin insulted, harassed, and cruelly treated." Of the Maharanee of Rewa, who is stated to have suffered even worse indignities at the hands of Major Barr (with Sir Lepel Griffin's approval), he pens the following ad captandum appeal:—"Could but Her Majesty the Queen Empress of India see the manner in which this Royal lady is treated, and could you, my lords and gentlemen, realise, even for a moment, what the incidents referred to mean to the Indian people, even though it be in the dying days of a Session that these facts are placed in your hands, I am satisfied that Parliament would not be prorogued until justice was done. Alas! India is a long way off, Rewa is but a name, the Chandalin Maharanee merely a shadow, and her moans too faint to be apprehended by ears filled with the din of British political strife.

But the greater part of Mr. Digby's pamphlet letter is taken up with arguments against the action of the Government of India in the matter of the Kashmir State. The late Resident, Mr. Plowden, and the present one, Colonel Parry Nisbet, come in, of course, for their share of abuse. According to Mr. Digby, who, while in India last year, 'had special opportunities of ascertaining the real character of the Maharaja and his rule," the administration of Kashmir by Pratap Singh was a model of good government. "No misgovernment has been proved against his Highness, according to my information none exists. It is true misgovernment has been alleged, and many hard things said, of the Maharaja. What these may be, what his Highnesses alleged iniquities are, no one, either in India or in England, has yet stated. The people of Kashmir are lightly taxed, justice is dispensed with even-handedness by honest and thoroughly capable trained judges, barristers in some cases having been raised to the Bench; public works are flourishing everywhere; the people are contented and happy; in every direction there are signs of a desire to keep Kashmir in line with the most advanced Provinces of the Empire." So far Mr. Digby, and no paid advocate could plead a brief stronger on behalf of the Maharaja; but where does the truth rest? Mr. Digby would, of course, reject the statements of Sir Lepel Griffin, and refuse the evidence which Sir John Gorst can produce; but the Calcutta Statesman is a paper which ought to be an authority with Mr. Digby, for it generally endorses the views he and his friends take on all Indian questions. Yet this is what the Statesman to hand by the present mail says:—"For the last twenty-seven years the people of Kashmir have been suffering almost every evil that such a population can suffer. The British Government meanwhile has stood absolutely aloof from it, and is answerable for it in no way. Who can forget the horrors of the famine in Kashmir a few years back? And when the Government, for the first time in the history of the Province, attempts to secure an amelioration of matters, our Native contemporaries either deny indignantly that there has been any misgovernment whatever, or denounce the Government in terms utterly unmeasured for having 'annexed' the Province! The Statesman has not forsaken the cause of the Native princes. We never can forsake it, but when we see utterly untrue statements put forward against a course which we believe the Government has wisely and honestly entered upon, we shall never support what we believe to be untrue."

We would commend this honourable sentiment to Mr. William Digby, C.I.E.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

As operations in the Chin Hills are still to be carried on, more coolie transport is being intended for, and another batch of men will probably be sent from India next month, and yet another corps be raised for despatch in the autumn.

THE Secretary of State has declined to accept the proposal of the Government of India that the titles of District Staff Officer should be abandoned, and the old titles of Assistant and Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General restored.

THE Government of India have addressed the Secretary of State on the question of the promotion of Indian officers by selection to the rank of Colonel with a view to the necessary regulations being framed.

THE cases of cholera reported from the Sikkim Field Force occurred at Jeyluk, below Lingtu, and not at Gnatong itself. There were two cases on the 12th instant at Jeyluk, one of which terminated fatally.

IN connection with the army mobilisation scheme all batteries of artillery in the 1st Army Corps are to receive their full complement of horses, some 200 being at present needed to place these batteries on a war footing.

IN connection with the scheme for utilising the armies of the Native States, the organisation of the cavalry in the Rajputana States will be taken in hand shortly. Major Beatson, 11th Bengal Lancers, has been appointed Inspecting Officer of the cavalry regiments at Jodhpore, Bhurtpore and Ulwar.

IT has, we understand, been decided by the home authorities that Lord William Beresford may retain the appointment of Military Secretary to the Viceroy until December, 1890, unless meanwhile a vacancy should occur in the 9th Lancers, in which case he will rejoin his regiment as second in command.

PRIVATE WILLIAMS, of the Highland Light Infantry, was hanged at Peshawar on the 18th for the murder of a comrade named Tole. The convict, who expressed much penitence, was executed in the presence of the regiment.

THE work of reorganising the infantry of the Punjab States, which are to share in the defence of the North-West Frontier, was actively carried on during the first four or five months of the current year. It was found at the outset that the system of drill which obtained most favour in the various States was very antiquated, the one great aim of the officers being to teach their men to march past, which they were able to do with fair precision. But smartness on parade, soldierly appearance, and confidence in their arms were all wanting. The first thing, therefore, to be done was to borrow drill instructors from the regular regiments of the Native army and to post them to each State. Three of these were sent to Patiala, two to Jhind, Nabha, and Kapurthala, and one to Bahawulpore, Faridkote and Maler Kotla, respectively. The officers and non-commissioned officers were taught in accordance with the new drill book of 1889, and they gradually learned enough to drill their own men, who were meanwhile also passing through the instructors' hands. The instruction was given just as if the soldiers had only been enlisted a few weeks and still practically recruits. This plan was found to answer very well, the men taking an interest in their drill and showing anxiety to learn it quickly. The total strength of the infantry in the States, excluding Cashmere, is now over 3,500, Patiala contributing 1,000, and Jhind, Nabha, and Kapurthala 600 each. The working uniform which has been adopted is khaki, and the accoutrements when obsolete are being replaced by those of the Mackenzie pattern. The issue of snider rifles to each regiment so soon as it is reported to be in a state fit to justify the men being instructed in the use of the breech-loader was sanctioned some time ago, and in the ensuing cold weather musketry instruction will be generally carried out. As the greatest attention has been paid to physique in selecting the sepoys for the picked regiments, there is now a body of troops in the Punjab which in another year will be well advanced towards that efficiency which would justify their employment on service.

A RETROSPECT OF THIRTY YEARS IN INDIA.

The same decadence is visible in native society; there is more education, more municipal activity, more striving after political advancement. Every learned profession is crowded with the outcome of our Universities and the increased facilities for visiting England. The Bench, the Bar, the ranks of the attorneys and the medical profession, are all full to repletion with natives of the country, but the good old-fashioned, courteous, kindly benevolent old Hindoo and Mahomedan gentlemen, where are they? Where are the men who used to be our friends, whose word was their bond, whose visits were a pleasure, whose friendship was a privilege, whose help was never withheld from white man or black? Gone over to the great majority, leaving few like them behind. Raja Buddy Nath, Radha Kanth Deb, Kally Krishna, Suttya Churn and Suttyanund Ghosaul, Rajendra Nath Mullick, Prosonno Coomar Tagore, Pertab Chunder Singh, Shib Kishen Banerjee, Sham Churn Mullick, Ram Gopal Ghose, Khelut Chunder Ghose, Peary Chand and Kissory Chand Mittra, Heera Lal Seal, Harendra Krishna, Suttya Krishna Ghosal, Krishna Mohun Banerjee, Burdwan, Benares Vizianagram, and Gidhore; and of the Mahomedan community that gentlest son of the warlike Tippoo. Prince Golam Mahomed, Nawab Amir Ally, the courteous but wily Ally Nuckee Khan, and the gallant and loyal Colonel Hedayat Ally. All these we knew well, and appreciated in their various characters, but they are gone, and, except a few of the older generation, they are forgotton. They are not all gone, however, the acquaintances and friends of our youth and manhood; but those that remain seem to have fallen out of public life, and to have sought the retirement and otium cum dignitate befitting advancing years. There still remains that grand old man, Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, full of the learning of the East and of the West, fluent of speech, pregnant with wisdom, rich in anecdote and, apropos, caustic, severe, and sometimes bitter in argument, but ever in debate and in correspondence, an open foe and a gentlemanly antagonist, and withal a staunch friend and kindly and amusing companion. The quiet, courteous Sir Jotendro Mohun; the genial, kindly Sir Norendra Krishna; the liberal, public-spirited, kind-hearted Maneckjee Rustomjee; the grave and thoughtful Raja Doorga Churn; the gentle artist, Coomar Debendro Mullick; the evergreen Nawab Abdool Luteef; the once Europeanised but now characteristically Mahomedan Chitpore Nawabs, Asgar Ally and Ahmed Ally; and the "friend of my friend," Baboo Juggadanund Mookerjee, are still amongst us. A faint shadow of that kindly old Prince Golam still survives in his cousin, Prince Mahomed Rahimoodeen, while that prince of good fellows and good fellow among Princes Mahomed Furrokh Shah's burly form, hirsute face, and manly and sporting habit, goes back beyond his gentle grandfather to his strong-handed warlike ancestor, Hyder, Sultan of Mysore. These are some of the men we have known, and have been, and are, privileged to claim friendship with; but when they pass away, that little remnant, what have we to replace them? Surendra Nath Banerjee, the Demosthenes of the students, the Fiery Cross of the National Congress. And yet, who that knows him, can withhold genuine admiration of his undoubtedly great gifts? His marvellous command of English (which to him is a foreign tongue), his flow of language, his well turned sentences, his perfect accent. The man is a born orator, as well as a scholar. We have never heard him address a Native meeting in their own tongue, but we can imagine the effect. Then if we regard dispassionately the man and his life's history, we cannot but sympathise with, and condone anything in his public acts and utterances that may, to some minds, savour of disloyalty to the present Government and British rule. Starting in life with great natural talents of which he had made the best use; braving all the discomforts and disabilities entailed in crossing the seas; competing with the élite of the English students on their own ground, he, a stranger and an alien, speaking a foreign tongue, and triumphantly winning a place in the ranks of the most exclusive service in the world—the heaven-born Indian civil service—one of the very first of his countrymen to accomplish this great aim,—to return to the land of his birth full of hopes and ambition for the future—and the result? At the very blossoming of his career, while his foot was yet on the first step of the ladder, he trips; it was but a stumble, a false step, from which a friendly hand would have saved or recovered him; but no, he is thrown down, cast out, all the promise of his life blighted, for a trivial error for which, as one of the oldest, most worthy, and most looked up to civilians in the service once told us, "had he been an Englishman, his magistrate would never have allowed him to get into trouble." Can we wonder, then, that such a man should view the dominant race with no kindly feelings: that his political strivings should sometimes carry him beyond the limits of loyalty and free speech? And with it all we are assured that there is no more loyal native of Bengal at heart than Surendra Nath Banerjee, and to those Europeans who possess his intimacy and friendship there is a charm of manners, a genuine heartiness and kindliness of life, speech, and hand clasp which draws one towards the man, and creates a desire to know more of him and of his real thoughts and aspirations; but alas, here again the social gulf yawns, and we lose touch of each other.

And must it be ever so? We fear that in our time there will come no change. So long as caste prejudices and religious and social barriers on the one hand, and our insular reticence and pride of race on the other, stand between us and this people there can be no fusion of the races, no bridging over the gulf!

PAUCITY OF OFFICERS IN THE PUNJAB.—The Punjab Government has addressed the Government of India pointing out the state of depletion in the ranks of the Punjab Commission, and requesting the recall of senior officers belonging to the Punjab from Burma, and also those officers whose services have been placed at the disposal of the Foreign and the Finance Departments, as well as those lent to other Presidencies. The Civil and Military Gazette remarks:—The return of these officers will probably be left to depend upon themselves. It is not likely that they will be forced to return to the Punjab against their wishes or at any sacrifice of pay or prospects of promotion. General opinion is likely to find the Local Government guilty of want of foresight in this matter. The condition of the Province ought to have been easily anticipated and provided against. Consequently the Punjab Government cannot count upon much sympathy from the Supreme Government, who will argue that ordinary prudence and abstention from freely recommending the flower of the Punjab Commission for employment elsewhere would have averted the difficulties that Sir James Lyall's Government is now struggling with. At the same time, something will have to be done to relieve the latter.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

Mr. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes :—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole proriestors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic subetances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.
This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA." From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. Davenport, London.
Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Great Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

OPINIONS.

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, AUGUST 19, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 30th July; from Allahabad and Madras to the 28th July; and from Calcutta to the 28th July.

HIS Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's tour in the Eastern Frontier districts, preliminary to an inspection of the Burma garrison, will extend as far north as Dibrugarh.

SIR CHARLES CROSTHWAITE, Chief Commissioner, Burma, takes three months' sick leave early in September. Mr. A. P. MacDonnell acts for him, Mr. C. J. Lyall taking up the duties of Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department. Mr. A. Campbell, Deputy Commissioner of Kamrup, will probably act for Mr. Lyall.

MR. R. J. CROSTHWAITE, officiating Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, arrived at Nagpur on July 23.

A BILL will shortly be introduced in the Legislative Council providing that when the post of Administrator-General in Bengal becomes vacant a similar office shall be created under every Local Government, each holder of the appointment also discharging the duties of official trustee.

THE police reorganisation scheme is taking definite shape. The necessity for increasing the rate of pay and securing a better class of men is fully recognised. It is suggested, as a means of improving the prospects of sub-inspectors and head constables, that the police be linked to the subordinate executive service. The District Police Reserves are also to be improved and armed with something better than the Brown Bess. The Reserves are to be armed and disciplined on the same principle as the Irish constabulary, and are to be kept at certain centres, and employed in serious disturbances.

MAJOR-GENERAL ELLES, Adjutant-General, takes three months' leave from August 31st. Colonel Harris will officiate for him.

MR. A. P. HOWELL, who is succeeded by Mr. Fitzpatrick from Assam as Resident at Hyderabad, resigns the Civil Service from August 13th.

MR. H. S. COTTON officiates as Financial Secretary to the Bengal Government during the Hon. Mr. Colman Macaulay's absence on leave.

COLONEL H. P. PEACOCK, Political Agent in Ulwar, officiates as Resident at Meywar during Colonel Miles' absence on two months' special leave.

COLONEL BEN WILLIAMS, Director of the Army Remount Department, proceeds home immediately, owing to his health having again broken down. Lieutenant Colonel Deane will succeed him in the appointment.

BRIGADE-SURGEON PILCHER acts as Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals in the North-West Provinces during the absence of Deputy Surgeon-General Rice.

MAJOR TRAVERS, Aide-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief, goes home shortly on furlough. His place will be taken by Major Cowan, R.A.

THE services of Mr. C. L. Griesbach, C.I.E., who has just returned from Afghanistan, will be placed at the disposal of the Geological Department forthwith.

CAPTAIN DURAND was expected to reach Gilgit on July 23 on his journey to Hunza and Nagar.

MR. HART arrived at Gnatong on July 26 from Rinchagong, and proceeded to Darjeeling early the following morning. Hopes of an understanding are held out, but nothing definite is known.

THE Tibetans, following the practice of last summer, have again established a small post on the Garhwal border.

MAJOR CATHER, R.E., in command of the Royal Engineers at Mandalay, died there from fever on July 22.

A LARGELY attended public meeting was held in Rangoon last week for the purpose of inviting Prince Albert Victor to visit Burma. Mr. Norton, the President of the Municipality, was voted chairman. The following resolutions were put to the meeting, translated into Burmese, and carried by acclamation:—First, that the meeting, having heard with pleasure of the intention of Prince Albert Victor to visit Her Majesty's eastern dominions during the ensuing cold season, respectfully beg his Royal Highness will be pleased to extend his visit to Burma, where he will be assured a loyal and hearty welcome from all classes and races; second, that the chairman be requested to forward the foregoing resolution to the Chief Commissioner, requesting he will be good enough to communicate the wishes of this meeting to Prince Albert Victor through the proper channel. After a vote of thanks to the chairman the meeting separated. Many Chinese and Burmans from the Upper Province were present.

MAJOR COOKE, Deputy Commissioner of Mandalay, has been deputed to inquire into the charge brought against Mr. Chisholm, District Superintendent of Police, Myingyan, of autraging a Burma woman by tattooing her.

THE plan of operations to be adopted in the Lushai country next cold weather contemplates the movement of a column from the Chin Hills westward, not later than November 15th. It is possible a force may work from the Cachar border as well as from the Chittagong Hills.

THE question of the transfer of Sind to the Punjab has been finally dropped, it being thought undesirable to make any alteration in the existing arrangement. The main consideration which influenced the authorities in coming to this decision is that Sind has ceased to be a frontier province.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHOY recently addressed Lord Reay protesting against the affront offered to the Parsee community by Mr. Ommanney, the Inspector-General of Police, Bombay, in his Note which was published in the Parliamentary Blue-book on the Crawford case. Lord Reay, in reply, assured Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy that the confidence of the Government in the Parsees had been in no way shaken by the opinions expressed by Mr. Ommanney. The community are still considering the advisability of holding a public meeting on the subject.

A MEETING of the trustees and others interested in the Egerton Mills was held at Simla, July 25. It was resolved to lay a scheme for working the mills in connection with the Cawnpore Woollen Mills before the shareholders and debenture holders for consideration. It is proposed that the debenture holders renew for five years at six per cent., that the bank continues to loan at reduced interest, that three lakhs be raised in preference shares, and that after the payment of ten per cent. on the preference shares the balance to go to the shareholders. The Cawnpore Mills would be asked to take entire management, the expences being divided between the two companies. Competition would thus be avoided, both in buying wool and selling the manufactures, while the expenses of separate management would be saved. The money of the creditors would be secured, and the shareholders would retain their shares.

THERE have been serious landslips at Simla. The public road below the new Club gave way, a large quantity of earth and about fifty trees being precipitated on the Mall. Subsequently a portion of the khud above went down, thus forming a continuous break, stretching from the new Club to the Mall, fifty feet broad. Traffic on the Mall is diverted round by the military offices.

MR. GRIESBACH has been posted to Beluchistan to investigate the mineral deposits of the country.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR will probably attend the Cavalry Camp of Exercise at Muridki in January.

THE MacGregor Memorial Medal has been awarded this year to Colonel Mark Bell for his explorations in Seistan and Persia.

THE United Service Institution's subject for next year's prize essay is "The Organisation and Employment in War of Native Cavalry."

THE Thibetan outpost in Garhwal numbers some eight or ten men.

MR. H. A. D. PHILLIPS goes on furlough early next year, and will hand over the editorship of the Calcutta Review this October to Mr. H. H. Risley.

ONE of the English opinions on the Indian Railway Bill have been received. The measure will be brought forward next winter at Calcutta.

NOTES.

TELEGRAPHIC news from India to-day states that the Lushai expeditionary force will comprise the same regiments as were sent last year. General Symons will command the co-operating force from Burma, which will include the King's Own Scottish Borderers and the 2nd Battalion of the 4th Goorkhas. The telegraph line in the Chittagong Hills has been completed to Lungsing, half way between Demagiri and Lungleh.

TANTIA BHEEL, the notorious freebooter of the Central Provinces, has at length been caught. His capture was owing to the treachery of a Bheel friend, whose hospitable shelter he had accepted. It may be remembered how another Tantia fell during the mutiny to similar treachery on the part of a supposed friend.

THE Government of India, the Times Calcutta correspondent telegraphs, has issued a Resolution dealing with the question of educational reform. It "recognises a development of the evils of irreverance and disobedience, and recommends corporal punishment." Can this mean that the "first-class classical Babu" may be flogged at school for irreverence? But what will be considered "irreverence" in a Babu? The Resolution, we are further told, recommends "the inculcation of manly courage and moral discipline" and "the preparation of moral text books." If the manly courage could only be secured, the moral discipline might follow, and there might then be less need of moral text books, of which surely Indian schools have sufficient already.

THAT news must be scarce in India just now may be taken for granted, for besides telegraphing the above information, the Calcutta correspondent has wired to Printing House-square of those whom Mr. Henry Thomas Buckle considers as "the really important authors whom the world has produced." Here they are:—Excluding physical and mathematical works, the writer specifies as the principal original writers Homer, Plato, Aristotle, Dante, Shakespeare, Bacon, Descartes, Hobbes, Grotius, Locke, Berkeley, Kant, Hegel, and Comte; in positive philosophy Mill's "Logic," Smith's "Wealth of Nations," Malthus on Population, and Ricardo's "Political Economy," with "Don Quixote," the "Pilgrim's Progress," and Goethe's "Faust."

THIS is all very well, and Mr. Buckle might have added his own name without any excess of vanity; but even with the following opinion—"The Romans, it is added, produced nothing original, except jurisprudence. Their philosophy they stole from the Greeks, and spoiled it in the stealing," it may be questioned if the information is worth the cost of the telegram. It appears that it was "an interesting communication" from Mr. Buckle to Lady Reay. Did he also wire it to her ladyship?

BUT perhaps it is better that the correspondent should send home harmless twaddle rather than high falutin opinions of his own regarding coming or existing dangers to India. He tells us that the Secretary of State's despatch on the subject of the corrupt Native officials has reached Bombay, but that numbers of these men are at the present moment actually exercising the powers of magistrates of the first and second class. This, if true, is unfortunate; but the Government of Bombay placed itself in a fix when it offered an unrestricted indemnity to these men for giving evidence on the Crawford trial. This was a blunder; but it might be a worse blunder for the Secretary of State to now weaken the hands of the Government of Bombay—by ordering it to break faith—as the Times correspondent recommends.

BUT it need not be dreaded that the retention of these magistrates in office will have the disastrous effect prophesied by the gentleman at "the other end of the wire," who telegraphs to-day as follows:—"If these men are maintained in office, the great principle, that official corruption is an actual statutory disqualification for employment in the public service, will be discredited. It is impossible to give an accurate measure of the disastrous consequences in India of so dangerous a concession to the very serious inducements to corrupt administration which are constantly held out to individual members of the subordinate services. All the strenuous and high-minded efforts of successive Governments from the time of Cornwallis to purge officialism from the taint of hereditary corruption will be rendered comparatively nugatory by Lord Reay's Government if he is permitted to condone and reward avowed official venality and corruption."

ONE of the most serious items of news, however, is that which tells of the debate in the Governor-General's Council at Simla, on Wednesday last, on the Cantonment Bill, when Sir Frederick Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief, made the alarming statement that the percentage of British soldiers on the sick list in India had doubled since the suspension of the C.D. Acts. As General Chesney remarked, "it was impossible to overrate the importance of the subject"; but the Marquis of Lansdowne could only point out that "the Indian Government was bound by the House of Commons resolution." This is what the "faddists" in the House and out of it have succeeded in doing, viz., doubling the number of sick in the military hospitals, and crippling military efficiency. And so it ever will be where sentimentalism is allowed to usurp the place of commonsense.

YET there are people who would leave India to the "faddists," and by doing away with the Secretary of State for India's Council trust India to the tender mercies of Parliament. Here we are now at the close of the Session, and yet the leader of the House cannot name a night for the discussion of the Indian Budget. None of the leading papers here seem to have noticed this as anything extraordinary, but it has struck the New York Herald as a little curious. "Here," says that journal, "is a great Empire, its good Government involving the happiness of millions, and yet no Ministry has ever been able to induce the House to give the least attention to the business. The Indian Budget comes in at the end of the Session. Members are off on the moors worrying the grouse; London is dead; business is transacted to empty benches. There will be a lame, idle debate on India, the estimates will pass without statement, and protests will be unheard." Sir George Campbell may be the only member of the House who desires that there should be an autumn Session, but he cannot be the only one who should protest against this way of dealing with the Indian Financial Statement. Hon. members might bear in mind a saying, which has almost passed into a proverb, that "If England ever loses India it will be in the House of Commons."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, AUG. 18.

Tantia Bheel, the famous Bheel robber chief of the Central Provinces, has at last been captured in Holkar's territory. He was betrayed by a Bheel who had given him shelter. He was taken while asleep in a house at Banbar, a village in the hilly country where Holkar's territory marches with the Nimar and Khandesh districts. The prosecution of Raja Ram, one of Holkar's magistrates, for aiding and abetting Tantia Bheel is still proceeding.

At the last meeting of the Legislative Council at Simla, on the presentation of a report on the Cantonment Bill, a very important discussion took place on the serious increase of sickness in the army, as an immediate result of the recent resolution of the House of Commons affecting military hygiene. General Chesney said there had been an alarming increase of illness among the British and Native soldiers since the resolution was passed. The Commander-in-Chief stated that the returns of the Surgeon-General showed that the number of cases had actually doubled, and the cases were of a much more virulent type. The Viceroy said the Government was greatly indebted to the Commander-in-Chief for his weighty remarks. If any room had existed for doubt as to the gravity of the case which confronted the Government, his statement had dispelled that doubt. He hoped public opinion would support the Government in its endeavours to reduce the evil as much as possible. In such endeavours the Government would at the same time regard the obligations imposed by the House of Commons' resolution.

A fire broke out in one of the wings of the newly-constructed Viceregal Lodge at Simla on Wednesday. Fortunately the fire was discovered and suppressed before it had time to spread to other portions of the building.

Ayoub Khan has returned to Murree from Cashmere.

A case which has caused profound excitement among the Hindoo community recently came before the Madras High Court. The Mohunt, or chief priest of the Tripati temple, a building very sacred in the eyes of Hindoos, was charged with forgery and breaches of trust in connection with the temple property. The magistrate issued search warrants, and the police invaded the sacred precincts of the great temple on Tripati Hill, and seized the Mohunt's property and papers. The magistrate further directed the removal of a sacred pillar, standing in front of the temple, for the purpose of recovering from the ground below some brass vessels filled with gold coins, alleged to have been buried there. This pillar had been erected at a cost of Rs. 200,000, and its desecration, it was stated, would wound the religious feelings of countless millions. The High Court directed a stay of proceedings, and the further hearing of the case was postponed till next Thursday.

The Sikkim field force has been practically broken up, and orders have been issued to withdraw forthwith the 2nd Battalion of the 1st Goorkhas and the 32nd Pioneers.

The latest telegraphic reports from Madras concerning Ganjam state that the number of those receiving village relief was 93,561, and that 10,163 were fed in the kitchens. Of those relieved 58,358 were children and 32,377 women. Prices had somewhat fallen, and prospects generally had improved. The question of constructing the Gopalpore pier was still under the consideration of the Government.

Lord Connemara will leave Ootacamund on September 5th, and after a short tour will arrive in Madras on the 12th. Prince Albert Victor while en route to Madras will visit Seringapatam, Mysore, and the Nilgiri-hills. From Madras he will proceed on a visit to the Maharaja of Travancore, who proposes to entertain him on a regal scale.

BURMA.

RANGOON, AUG. 18.

The attitude of the Seyia and Kanhon Chin tribes is still uncompromising, and they continue to harass the garrison of Fort White. A large number of coolies from Manipore is expected. On their arrival at Fort White the troops will assume the offensive, and an expedition will be undertaken to burn and destroy the crops of the rebel tribes. The health of the British and Goorkha troops at Fort White continues very unsatisfactory. A detachment of the Norfolk Regiment has left Mandalay to replace the sick at Fort White, and the 4th Goorkhas, at present stationed there, will be relieved by the 42nd Goorkhas.

The main operations with a view to subjugating the Chins and joining hands with a force from Bengal will commence early in December. Two columns will move from Burma, one from Fort White, another from the Gungaw Valley. Brigadier-General Symons will command the force sent from this province. The transport and commissariat departments are being considerably reinforced from India.

Major Harvey, of the Commissariat Department, has died at Myingyan from fever contracted while he was on the road to Fort White.

The erection of permanent barracks has been sanctioned for Shwebo, and barracks will also be erected at Meiktila, as it is intended to keep British troops permanently at both these posts.

For the last fortnight the rainfall has been satisfactory, and crop prospects are now more favourable.

Sir C. Crosthwaite is expected to arrive in Rangoon on the 23rd inst. Mr. A. P. MacDonnell will leave Simla on the 23rd to assume the government of Burma.

GANJAM.

We have received from the India Office a copy of the following telegram from the Governor of Madras, dated August 13, 1889:—

"Condition of Ganjam for week ending August 10.—Season continues very favourable; rainfall fairly heavy; and general average, for 19 stations 1·84in. during week. Prices stationary. Numbers on large works, 5,767; on small works, 2,984. Numbers on gratuitous relief 93,744, of whom 14,889 men, 22,497 women, and 56,358 children. Seventy-three relief circles constituted and 63 kitchens established.

"Imports by sea, 498 tons; by land, 459 tons. Deaths from cholera, 343."

METALLIC POISONING IN INDIA.

With the cause célèbre of the present time before us the last annual report of Dr. Lyon, the analyst to the Government of Bombay, on the employment of poison in India for criminal and other purposes in 1888 is full of interest. The cases quoted by Dr. Lyon point to the conclusion that deaths from criminal administration of metallic poison are not only common but of increasing frequency in India at the present day. It would seem that the total number of such cases dealt with by this one authority during 1888 was 360, while he had only 282 the preceding year, and the general work of analysis had increased fivefold since the issue of the first report in 1872. This enormous increase is accounted for partly by the fact that the use of poison for criminal purposes is becoming increasingly frequent each year. Vegetable poisons, which were most extensively used a few years ago, have been rapidly giving place to metallic poisons. This Dr. Lyon ascribes to the ease with which drugs, such as arsenic, are procurable at the present time, there being practically no restriction on their sale. Out of eighty-four undeniable cases of human poisoning, arsenic was employed in forty-one, copper in six, mercury in five, powdered glass in three, and red-lead in three, while, of the remaining twenty-seven cases, opium appears to have been used in fifteen, datura in five, alcohol in two, prussic acid in one, and oleander and other plants in four. A considerable proportion of the poisoners escape without ever paying the penalty of the law. Dr. Lyon gives several instances where a family, having eaten rice, which had previously been thoroughly washed, was taken ill, some of whom never recovered, whilst the murderers remained undiscovered. In the vessel containing the rice large quantities of arsenious oxide were detected. On several occasions flour was found to be adulterated with considerable quantities of arsenious oxide. Poisoning by means of powdered glass is, comparatively speaking, quite a recent innovation, and hence the number of cases which had come under Dr. Lyon's notice was smaller, probably, than it otherwise would have been.—Iron.

THE Commander-in-Chief has ordered a court-martial for the trial of Honorary Major Creighton, Army Pay Department. The date of the trial has not been fixed yet. The Court assembles at Secunderabad, and is to be composed as follows:—President: Colonel Wetherall; members, six Field Officers and one Captain, to be detailed yet; waiting members: one Field Officer and one Captain, to be detailed yet. The Judge-Advocate is Colonel Swinton Skinner, and the prosecutor Colonel Alexander.

RAILROAD FROM NAGPOOR TO THE SEACOAST.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—On the 11th of July, 1882, Allen's Indian Mail informed the English public that good roads were required in Kalahundi, a district lying between the rich country of Chutteesgurh and the sea.

Seven years have elapsed, and it is now seriously proposed that a railroad should be constructed from Raipoor, the southern capital of Chutteesgurh, to the Bay of Bengal, through Bogor lat. 20° 11′, long. 83° 17′, and Ombadola lat. 19° 49′, long. 83° 32′.

I solicit your attention to pages 71 and 72 of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 21st ult.

A survey has been made. From Raipoor to Bogor on the river Tel the country is reported to be "practically level."

The editor of the Pioneer Mail has apparently not been informed that the great want is a good harbour on the coast; there is little use in making a railway for 260 miles if it is only to lead to violent surf in which ships cannot exist. The Madras Government goes and looks, but what it does I cannot discover.

The coast north of the Godaveri river belonging to Madras should be placed under a special Commissioner until the coast railway from Calcutta to Madras shall have been constructed. The harbours of Coconada, Vizagapatam, Cicacole, and Ganjam should receive a little attention from the Imperial Government. A great future for the Central Provinces of India may be looked for, if one of the harbours of the Northern Circas be improved. An article from you adapting the information contained in the Pioneer Mail to the comprehension of the English public may induce the India Office to bestir itself.

The best map of the country appears to be that prepared by Major Scott, of Madras, in 1855, for military purposes; although on a small scale of twenty-four miles to the inch it may be found to be more practically useful than the large scale maps of the Survey Department of only four miles to the inch, the Indian Atlas.—Your obedient servant,

August 14. T.

INDIAN GRIEVANCES: WHAT A "GRIEVANCE MONGER" HAS TO SAY FOR HIMSELF.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—You have dealt with much plainness of speech, and with your wonted vigour, in your issue of last Monday, with my letter to Members of Parliament on certain promises of the Queen Empress to India Princes, which I allege have been broken. I doubt not you will afford me a little space in which to reply to one or two of your observations.

I need not defend him whom you denominate my brother grievance-monger. Mr. Bradlaugh can take most excellent care of himself. But I must say this for him: His action on behalf of India during the present session has been abundantly fruitful of good. There are thousands of people living in India at the present moment who, but for his devoted and persistent action, would have died. He has not made a single mistake, nor has he made any unfounded assertions. In every case save one (if I remember rightly), where the nature of the inquiry demanded it, the India Office (so far as British India is concerned) has promised inquiry.

As for what you term my "diatribe," I am prepared to prove all the statements I have made. You overlook the documentary evidence and the specific details which my letter contains. Those details are true or they are untrue. A Parliamentary or Royal Commission to inquire into Indian affairs will, Mr. Stanhope has recently said, in all probability, be appointed soon. When the inquiry is opened I shall do my best to get the grievances I have already brought to public notice, and a great many others besides, considered by the Committee or Commission. I shall do then, what I have done so far, bring nothing forward that I cannot prove. You say that Mrs. Besant has brought forward "false and calumnious charges" against Sir Lepel Griffin. Sir Lepel is, evidently, not of your opinion; if he were he would call upon the lady to justify her charges or bear the consequences of false witness. However that may be, I know all that I have said of this gentleman I can sustain.

You quote against me some remarks appearing in the Calcutta Statesman latest to hand, and commend them to my notice. I saw those remarks before I saw Allen's Indian Mail of the 12th inst. I had intended replying to those observations. As you endorse them, and press them upon my consideration, may I say to you what, if I had written to Calcutta, I should have said to the editor of the Statesman?

The remarks in question, quoted for my edification, are precisely like those generally current respecting alleged misgovernment in Kashmir. They are general, and most indefinite; in no respect are they specific: chapter and verse are not given. Indeed, all that is said of Kashmir could, with copious detail, be urged against our own rule of British India. For example: "Who," the Statesman asks, "can forget the horrors of the famine in Kashmir a few years back?" The same question may be asked of the famines in British India, and with infinitely greater point and force. How about the many millions of starved folk in Madras, Mysore, Bombay, and the N.W. Provinces of eleven years ago? How about the twenty to thirty thousand persons who have recently died in Ganjam of what is, in famine times, called "cholera"? How about those whom Sir John Edgar, on his recent tour, found had died of starvation? Sir Edward Watkin, in the book he has recently written, and, with his wonted cowardice in matters connected with India, has marked "for private circulation," admits, in effect, that if the population in any part of India were decreasing, those who urge better government, because the present mode of administration is not good enough, would have some grounds for what they urge. Well, here are some facts taken from the Statistical Abstract of British India, and treated with more fairness than the Government of India would desire, for an increase of 1 per cent. per annum is taken instead of 1½, which they declare should follow their good government. The facts may, perhaps, satisfy Sir Edward Watkin, and close the mouths of others who are too ready, purely from prejudice and without any proof, to say harsh things of Indian-ruled States

That is not a very satisfactory record. If I take the Government rate of normal increase the minus total would be 12,000,000 and more. In nearly one-fourth of the districts there was distinct loss.

Is anybody prepared to say that a like record can be compiled of Kashmir? No one has yet done so. I do not suppose the Statesman, even though it admitted the facts to be unassailable, would allow that; therefore we ought to withdraw from British India, and proceed to urge that Russia, or a purely Indian Government, should take our place. Yet, in the entire absence of proof, this is what the Statesman and others do say with regard to Kashmir. I protest against such action, and should do so even though I stood alone. Fortunately I do not stand alone. Non-official India and the Indian princes have now many friends both in the House of Commons and out of it.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully, WM. DIGBY

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

REGULATIONS for the promotion of Indian officers to the rank of Colonel under the Warrant of January 1st, 1887, are being framed at Simla.

GENERAL WHITE has recommended the grant of a medal to all the troops serving in Upper Burma up to the 31st March last. He also sent in a list of officers whose services deserved special recognition.

WHEELED transport is to be provided for the 1st and 2nd India Army Corps. Pack animals (mules whenever possible) will only be used for carrying the first reserve of ammunition, entrenching tools and hospitals equipment.

AN inquiry has been carried out regarding the behaviour of the 10th Madras Infantry in the Gungaw district some months ago, when the posts were evacuated without sufficient cause. The case is now before the authorities at Army Headquarters.

THE Gwalior Durbar has offered to equip and maintain 2,000 troops for imperial service. The Maharajah of Jeypore has offered to keep up a corps of 1,000 transport animals, ready equipped for service, at a cost of a lakh of rupees per annum. Major Beatson visits Rajpootana for the purpose of arranging with the States as to the contingents they are to furnish. No arrangement has yet been made with Hyderabad, but it is expected that the Nizam will furnish 5,000 troops. Altogether it is expected that Native States will furnish between twenty-five and thirty thousand troops, nearly all cavalry. Major Mellis proceeds to Bhopal to make arrangements in connection with the Begum's offer, after which he goes to Mysore.

THE Rajah of Munipur is being asked to furnish a thousand coolies for the Lushai Expedition in October and a thousand in November. The total coolie corps required is about six thousand.

THE Government of India are forwarding their opinions on the question of continuous service in the Royal Engineers in India to the Secretary of State. Among the proposals put forward during the discussions on the subject was one that all service in India, whether continuous or not, should count towards pension on the Indian scale.

AT a General Court-Martial held at Hyderabad, Sind, on the 2nd July, 1889, Gunner George Gorman, F-3, R.A., was arraigned upon the charge of causing a mutiny in the forces belonging to Her Majesty's Regular Forces at Hyderabad, Sind. On the 30th of May, 1889, at about 10 P.M., when certain men of F-3, R.A., were ordered to go to their beds, and Driver Priday had been ordered to be placed in arrest for refusing to obey the order, he, the prisoner, Gunner George Gorman, pushed himself forward, and said to those around him:—"Driver Priday shall not go to the guard room," or words to that effect, in consequence of which language they, the men of F-3, R.A., who were then present in the room, combined together, and prevented the arrest of Driver Priday. The Court found the prisoner guilty of the charge, and sentenced him to be imprisoned with hard labour for two years, a sentence which has been confirmed by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay.

SIR GEORGE WHITE'S report on the military operations in Upper Burma, from the time when he assumed command to the 31st of March last, really partakes of the nature of a supplementary despatch in continuation of those describing the earlier operations. It will show conclusively that the country as a whole has been thoroughly pacified, and that only in the frontiers have the troops any work before them. Considering how great is the extent of Upper Burma and the character of the wild tribes which hold the hill country about it, the wonder is that the border expeditions have not been far more numerous. The Shans have, however, now generally made their submission; the Kachins about Bhamo and Mogaung have been brought under control; and the Red Karens have been on their best behaviour since Sawlapaw was deposed. The Chins on the western frontier have alone held out, but with the operations about to be undertaken to open out the Lushai country they must soon in their turn be reduced to a peaceful state. Upper Burma will then be as safe from disturbances as the Punjab or Assam.

IF the condition of the Madras Army can be judged from its Army List some of the regiments must present a curious appearance. Complaints have been heard before of the superfluity of colonels and absence of majors which has resulted in the Southern Presidency from the working of the Staff Corps system, but they scarcely measured the real facts. As to majors, the grade is practically extinct; there are only five on regimental duty among all the Madras regiments. But this is nothing to the union of youth and age, June and December, which furnishes the officering of some of the corps. In one, for instance, the colonel is a grey-haired warrior dating from 1859, while his next subordinate, who is both adjutant and officiating second-in-command, received his commission in 1884. The case of another regiment, the 17th Madras Infantry, is still more singular; for six months it has had no wing commanders at all, and the next senior officer after the colonel had six years' service. Why this should be, why some regiments should have no commandants, and why others—30 per cent. of the whole number—should have only one wing commander, is a mystery. Doubtless there is a reason, or Sir Charles Arbuthnot, who has a well-deserved reputation for common sense, would see to it. But even more mischievous than these half-filled ranks must be the constant transfer of officers to regiment from regiment. One corps (it is true it has lost men on active service) has eight officers with it, of whom five do not belong to it. The proportion of officers in Madras who have been over ten years with a single regiment is exceedingly small. No wonder that with such a system the Madrassi Sepoy should fail to do himself justice.—Pioneer.

GOVERNMENT EVICTIONS IN CEYLON.

Sir E. WATKIN asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies of whom was the Commission stated to have been appointed by the Governor of Ceylon to inquire into the alleged evictions and consequent deaths in parts of Ceylon composed; and had the attention of the Colonial Office been drawn to a letter which appeared in the Ceylon Mail of the 29th of June, 1889, from Mr. George Wall, in answer to inquiries from the Government agent as to the authority on which the statement had been made that 1,048 villagers evicted by the Government from their lands for non-payment of grain-tax had died of starvation in the vicinity of Nuwara Eliya, in which Mr. Wall said:—"I find it stated in the administration report on the Nuwara Eliya district for 1887 that 'between 1882 and 1885 2,889 paddy fields were sold for default of payment of the paddy tax,' and 'that in the case of the fields so sold 1,048 of the late owners had died.' That fact is not disputed. The only question is as to the cause of death. This seems to me to be sufficiently obvious, but is plainly suggested in the opening paragraph of an appeal on behalf of the Bodi-Ela scheme, of which the author of the foregoing statement is the prime mover, as follows:—'During the years from 1882 to 1885 large numbers of Kandyan villagers in the Nuwara Eliya district were ejected from their ancestral holdings by the sale of their paddy lands for default in the payment of paddy tax, to lead a vagabond life and eke out a miserable existence by pilfering in the villages, migrate to towns and swell the criminal population of the country, or, as was often the case, to die of sheer starvation in the jungle.'"

Baron H. DE WORMS: The Commission in question is a sub-committee of the Legislative Council. The Secretary of State's attention has been drawn to the passage quoted; but as the matters referred to are alleged to have happened some years ago, and as they are being carefully inquired into, he does not propose to take any further action pending the Governor's report.

Sir E. WATKIN: Is the Governor of Ceylon now in England or in Ceylon?

Baron H. DE WORMS:—I believe that he is in Ceylon, but I am not sure.

THE INDIAN NATIVE STATES.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the Secretary of State had received a copy of a letter addressed to members of that House intitled "India; The Queen-Empress's Promises; How they are Broken," issued from the Indian Political Agency, and written by Mr. William Digby, C.I.E.; whether he was aware if the statements contained therein were accurate, and the documents quoted (1) a memorial to the Viceroy from the Chandalin Maharanee of Rewa; and (2) an autograph letter from the Maharajah of Cashmere were authentic; and whether he would cause inquiry into the allegations in the said letter regarding the administration of affairs controlled by the Indian Foreign Office in connection with the States of Gwalior, Rampur, Bhopal, Rewa, and Cashmere.

Sir J. GORST: The Secretary of State has received a copy of the letter in question. He cannot commend the accuracy of its statements, nor vouch the authenticity of the documents quoted. The Secretary of State declines to institute an inquiry into the administration of Native States by the Government of India at the instance of a private individual. All the Native chiefs of India can make representations to the Secretary of State through the Government of India, and can appeal to him against any orders which are passed by that Government. No such representations or appeals have been received by the Secretary of State from any of the Native States mentioned in the question.

AUG. 15.

THE PRINCES AND CHIEFS OF INDIA.

In answer to Mr. BRADLAUGH,

Sir J. GORST said: At the Delhi Assembly on January 1, 1887, the Viceroy appointed 20 Councillors of the Empress. Of these 8 only were Natives, 12 being Europeans. The title of Councillor of the Empress was honorary. The holders were not to form part of any organised body, and were not to be summoned for collective deliberation, though on occasions of emergency consultations between the Viceroy and one or more of the Councillors might strengthen the hands of the Executive Government. The Council has, according to the original design, never met for the transaction of business; but the Secretary of State has no reason to suppose that successive Viceroys have failed to avail themselves of the advantage of consultation with the individual Councillors when occasion has arisen for their advice. It is the settled policy of the Government of India to associate the Princes and chiefs of India with the Government of Her Majesty, and no more conspicuous instance of the success of this policy can be cited than the recent arrangements respecting the Native armies and the defence of the north-west frontier.

Mr. BRADLAUGH: Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there are any Native Princes and chiefs now who are Councillors?

Sir J. GORST: No, Sir. I said nothing about them. I said eight were appointed in 1877.

Mr. BRADLAUGH: Are they alive now or not?

Sir J. GORST: No, Sir. I did not say whether they were alive or dead. (Laughter.)

Mr. BRADLAUGH: Then, will the hon gentleman say?

Sir J. GORST: If the hon. member wishes information on this subject, perhaps he will be good enough to put another question. (Laughter.)

Mr. BRADLAUGH: I will raise the question on the Indian Budget.

AUG. 16.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether he could now fix a day for the Indian Budget statement.

Mr. W. H. SMITH: I am sorry that I am not in a position to say when the Indian Budget will be taken, as it is necessary first to make considerable progress in Supply.

PIERS AND HARBOURS IN THE HIGHLANDS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government had received any report from the Secretary for Scotland concerning his recent inquiries into the condition and needs of the population on the western coast and islands of Scotland; and whether he was now prepared to state the intentions of the Government in reference to the provision of piers and harbours and of railway or other communication calculated to benefit the fishing industry in those districts.

Mr. W. H. SMITH said that the Government had received a report from the Secretary for Scotland with regard to the subject in question, and they would give that report their most careful consideration during the recess. They hoped to be able to bring in a Bill next Session dealing with the subject on the same lines as those of the Piers and Harbours Bill dealing with Ireland.

Mr. E. ROBERTSON asked whether the right hon. gentleman would consult Scotch members before they made any proposals to the House.

Mr. W. H. SMITH: I think that the hon. and learned member will see that any proposal that is made must be made upon the authority and responsibility of the Government. (Hear, hear.) Undoubtedly Scotch members will have a full opportunity of expressing their opinions.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked whether the report would be laid on the table and circulated among members of the House.

Mr. W. H. SMITH: No, Sir. The report is a private and confidential report for the information of the Government alone.

BURMESE FORESTS.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether sanction had been accorded by the Secretary of State to the concession of a monopoly in the working of the forests of Upper Burma to the Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation; and whether the correspondence on this subject with the text of the contracts or agreements between the Government of India and the Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation would be laid upon the table of the House.

Sir J. GORST: The Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation were in possession of a monopoly granted by the late King at the time of the conquest of Burmah. An agreement on the basis of the rights then possessed by the corporation was made a year ago between the corporation and the Secretary of State in Council. Papers on the subject, if moved for, will be laid on the table.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS.

Mr. CAVENDISH-BENTINCK asked the Secretary of State for War whether the War Office were in possession of any statistics from India relative to the alleged increase of contagious disease in the Indian Army since the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Act; and whether he could give any information on the subject.

Mr. E. STANHOPE: So far as the British troops are concerned, the admissions for venereal disease have risen from a yearly ratio of 323 per 1,000 for the year 1887 to 560 per 1,000 for the first four months in 1889.

Mr. CAVENDISH-BENTINCK asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the debate on the Cantonment Bill in the Legislative Council of India on the 14th inst. was correctly reported in the London newspapers of the 15th inst.; whether General Chesney then stated that the suspension of the Contagious Diseases Act had resulted in an alarming increase of disease among soldiers: whether General Sir F. Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief, then stated that the percentage of soldiers upon the sick list had doubled since the suspension of the Act; and whether the Cantonment Bill contained powers and provisions which would mitigate the prevalence of this disease and the sufferings caused by it.

Sir J. GORST: The Secretary of State had seen the reports in the Press of the debate in the Legislative Council, and has no reason to doubt the correctness of such reports. The Cantonment Bill contains provisions for mitigating the prevalence of all contagious diseases within cantonments, and regulations for that purpose are now under the consideration of the Government of India.

NATIVE witnesses are often rather curious customers to deal with, especially when they are young children, as the following story will show:—An Assistant Commissioner, writing to a friend from a sub division not many hundred miles from Calcutta, expresses surprise at the cuteness of some native children. "There was a child of eight giving evidence in my court the other day. To the first question she replied, 'I did not see anything,' which was rather an irrelevant answer. Upon that I asked her what she did not see, to which she comprehensively replied, 'What you are going to ask me.' After she had made the wildest and most improbable assertions, I discharged her, but not until I had read her a fine moral lesson to this effect:—'Do you know that it is very wrong to tell lies?' I got this startling answer:—'It does not make any difference to you; if it's wrong, I shall suffer for it.' After that I got weary of well doing!"

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL J. B. C. MORICE writes to an Allahabad paper:—Some years ago, when Civil Surgeon of Umritsur, I held charge of the leper asylum at Tarn Tarn, the largest in the Punjab. The asylum consisted of a large village surrounded by its own fields and provided with wells and bathing places. There was an hospital with a Native assistant surgeon in charge, and everything was done by way of treatment with Gurjun-oil, &c., but with little effect. The lepers lived in separate houses built in regular lines, they received a monthly allowance each, and were provided with blankets in the cold weather. Married lepers lived together, and often have they brought their young children to me and pointed out with evident satisfaction the marks of leprosy on them, as these marks entitled them to receive an extra allowance for each leper child. I do not know whether this rule still exists: it did in 1878 and 1879. In any arrangements the Government may now make regarding lepers something should be done to prevent the increase of the population amongst them instead of encouraging it, as was the case at Tarn Tarn.

THE EXODUS QUESTION.

(Madras Mail.)

It is whispered in Ootacamund, it is echoed in Madras, that the Secretary of State in Council has intimated that the stay of the Government of India at Simla shall be limited to five months, and that of the Government of Madras at Ooty to four months; and it is said that, in accordance with this decision, the Government of Madras will rebend its steps to the plains towards the end of next month, instead of, as had been previously arranged, at the close of October. We hope that this rumour may prove to be well-founded. This journal has never wavered in its opinion that a wrong is done to India by the attempt that has been made to govern it from localities where the Natives of this country and non-official Europeans are conspicuous by their absence. It is an old, but none the less a true, story that the interests of the State have been deliberately sacrificed to the personal comfort of a handful of public functionaries who are paid on a very liberal scale on the assumption that they will live in the midst of the people over whom they are placed in authority. Ootacamund and Coonoor, like Simla and Naini Tal, are stations that are as attractive to Europeans as they are repugnant to Indians; and as playgrounds wherein Anglo-Indians of all classes and grades may disport themselves for a few well-earned weeks of leave, and gain strength and zest for the resumption of routine duties, they are blessed facts. But in the real sense of the word they are not India; and Administrations cannot live for six or seven months in such retreats without losing sympathy with the people—their paymasters—who have to endure as best they may the conditions of existence in the plains; for true it is that "out of sight is out of mind." If the argument of unheroic selfishness, namely, that it is the first duty of the pillars of the State to consider their cuticle, may be accepted as an excuse for deserting fields of duty which were honoured in former years by the permanent presence of the members of the Government, then, indeed, it would be comparatively easy to justify the permanent location of the Government on the Hills, like the Army Headquarters. But it is idle to pretend that the successors of good men of old cannot with as much impunity as the latter did, or the Judges of the High Courts now do, live and work in the Capital of the Presidency at least as well as they can in a remote station of the Nilgiris. If there are among the pillars aforesaid some whose health would not admit of their remaining in the plains, then, with all courtesy, should those unfortunates be requested to take their pension and vacate office in favour of other men who are more physically "fit" to do their duty in the place where it can best be done. It is to be hoped that the limitation of the sojourn of the Government among the Todas will be extended to Army Headquarters, which, owing to the weakness of Sir M. Grant Duff's Government, has now been absent six or seven years from "Choultry Plain," which was for upwards of a century its appropriate seat. The Secretary of State's Council contains so many members who in former days participated in the personal advantages of residence during half the year or more at Simla or Ootacamund that if Lord Cross has arrived at the decision referred to he may have done so against the opinion of the majority of his colleagues. But it will not matter how such a decision is arrived at so long as it is adopted and put into practice; and if Lord Cross is found to be chiefly responsible for such a measure of simple justice to this country he will be able in due course to retire from office with the gratifying conviction that he has not presided over the destinies of India in vain.

THE LATE SIR SALAR JUNG.

(Englishman.)

The death of Sir Salar Jung at the early age of twenty-six is a sad and unexpected event. He was better known in the Western Presidency than in Calcutta. Still, many of our readers may remember that some five or six years ago he visited our city in company with the youthful Nizam, their object being to obtain the Viceroy's sanction to Sir Salar's appointment as Prime Minister of the Hyderabad State. No one who saw him then will forget the splendid physique of the young nobleman, his height being no less than six feet four inches. The appointment was after some hesitation confirmed, and the two youths took up the difficult work of guiding the destinies of the chief Native State in India. The arrangement cannot now be said to have been one even offering the probability of success. In the event, after about a year, the Nizam and Sir Salar fell out over some private quarrel, and the latter had to leave Hyderabad, being succeeded in his high office by Sir Asman Jah. Sir Salar Jung travelled for a time over Europe, visiting England and being received by the Queen. About this time he contributed to one of the leading Reviews a very able article on the Eastern question. Returning to India, he resided chiefly at the Bombay hill stations, where his family and followers joined him. He visited Hyderabad only once, by special permission of the Nizam, to settle his private affairs. As we stated previously, deceased leaves an infant son, his only child. In summing up the career of Sir Salar Jung, it is not too much to say that he was chiefly distinguished as being "the son of his father." Still, he possessed undoubted abilities, and under happier auspices might have achieved renown as a statesman on his own account.

COLONISING BURMA.

(Englishman.)

With reference to the colonisation of Burma with Natives of India we would suggest that some of the convicts transported to the Andaman Islands might be allowed after a certain interval to settle in Burma. Certainly the option might be given them, and we believe that not only would many of them choose to do so, but that often members of their families might be induced to join them from India, sons and wives and fathers. It must be remembered that a very great number of men sentenced to transportation for life bear a very good general character. There is a dispute about land, or a caste quarrel, and in a moment of excitement a number of men attack their opponents. A riot ensues, a man is killed, and often some half-dozen or more of the combatants shortly find themselves convicts for life. As a rule, the men so convicted are rather above the average in manly qualities, and, as having really no criminal propensities, they would be eminently fitted for colonists. We cannot, of course, say how far such convicts would accept tickets of leave to Burma, but in the case of Mahomedans and low caste Hindus we certainly believe they would prefer that country, and if the scheme were judiciously worked many of their relations might be induced to join them. At present only Behar is being drawn upon. It is probable that in point of climate Burma would better suit the inhabitants of Eastern Bengal. They are often men of fine physique, and the introduction of another element into our latest colony would add to its strength.

A PUNJAB BRIGHTON.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The great pending questions on which the prosperity of Karachi may be said to hang are, it is well known, better railway communication with the interior and the transfer of Sind from the control of the Government of Bombay to that of the Punjab. The effect of the latter measure would be indirect, but if Karachi were made the hot weather head-quarters of the Punjab Government the fullest benefit might be felt from the change in administration. Let us speculate for a moment as to what are the interests of Government in the matter. By virtue of its geographical position Karachi is the natural seaport of the Punjab. These advantages are nullified for want of more direct communication with the interior, and hence Karachi remains a second class port languishing for want of a steady trade. Provide it with facilities for traffic from Delhi, and it will at once rise in importance; ships might secure outward freights from Europe, and a steady import and export trade be carried on. The effect of this ought to be to create a brisker trade in the Punjab and greater activity on the railways serving the Punjab markets. The latter, consisting of the system of lines known as the N.W. Railway, ought to benefit by the stimulus given generally to business, and at the same time should not suffer anything from competition, as Delhi is outside the influence of the Punjab State Railway system. These considerations are not unimportant for Government. An increase of one per cent. in the earnings of the N.W. Railway would add over £300,000 to the revenues of the country yearly, and anything, therefore, that would conduce to this end must be beneficial to the Government and the public. It is of importance that Karachi should be raised to the position of a first class port, and the measures indicated might perhaps be the most effective to attain that end. The transfer of Sind to the Punjab and the establishment of Karachi as the hot weather head-quarters of Government are steps from which the seaport would derive considerable advantage, while a direct railway to Delhi would be beneficial to all parties. The establishment of a postal service to Europe would follow, and "Lahore super Mare" would then be an assured success.

"THE UNCOVENANTED" SERVICE.

(Pioneer.)

The Uncovenanted servants of the Government of India are not relaxing their efforts to gain a recognition of their claim to have their pensions paid in sterling, and though they can scarcely hope to get a two-shilling rupee, they at least will not remain content with a "token" worth little more than 1s. 4d. The members of the Service now in Simla have just issued a reply to Sir John Gorst's statement in the House of Commons on May 31, and in it they deal seriatim with the three arguments which he advanced to refute the case put forward. These were briefly that the Uncovenanted Service had no legal claim which could be held valid in a court of law; that existing grievances would be considered in connection with the proposals of the Public Service Commission; and that the House of Commons had divested itself of all powers of interference with the revenues of India, and that such an interference in the present case would have a bad moral effect. The Under-Secretary of State, it may be remembered, emphasised his first contention by stating that the poor Indian tax-payer should not be called upon to pay money to which the claimants were not legally entitled, and he is met on this point by the retort that equitable as well as legal considerations should be given due weight. The case of the Covenanted Civil servants is contrasted with that of the unfortunate Uncovenanted Service. The former have a pension of £1,000 sterling per annum guaranteed to them by law, and towards this they contribute 4 per cent. of their salary during the whole of their service. When this arrangement was made the value of the rupee was such as to justify the calculation that the Civilian would really himself contribute in the long run one-half of his pension. Since that time the rupee has fallen as low as 1s. 4d., but no extra percentage has been levied upon the Civilian's pay to meet the loss incurred by the fluctuation in exchange. The Simla Committee, by calculations which we presume have been carefully made, arrive at the conclusion that the State has now to pay eight lakhs of rupees, or £53,000, annually, to make up the deficit in the pension fund; and they fail to see how, in the face of this, there can be any force in Sir John Gorst's appeal for the "poor Indian taxpayer." We are sure that the Uncovenanted officers do not wish to deprive the Covenanted Civilian of his sterling pension, or with a falling rupee to raise his payments to the fund. Their contention is that equitable considerations should be given their due weight, and that if the State can be generous towards one section of its servants—and those the most highly paid—it should show equal generosity to the other. An appeal is here made to that principle of fair-play which Englishmen pride themselves upon, and it comes with almost pathetic force now that officers retiring on rupee pensions cannot from year's end to year's end estimate what their income is likely to be.

Sir John Gorst's second argument that Parliament should refrain from dealing with the question at all, as the Secretary of State contemplates taking action on the recommendations of the Public Service Commission is not at all palatable to the uncovenanted officers. They admit that possibly their position in the service may be improved; but this will not in any way affect their grievance in the matter of pension. When the time comes for retirement, there will still be the feeling that they are being unjustly dealt with by their future income being calculated in rupees. On the point of legality of the claims we think the attitude now taken up by the various committees in India is just what is required under the circumstances. In a service in which there are men with written covenants and men with no covenants at all—some with "agreements of an exceptional character," to quote Sir John Gorst's own words, and others with agreements which the best lawyer could scarcely understand—a whole series of test cases would be required to show what claims could really be upheld in a court of law. What the uncovenanted therefore say is:—"We have no wish to go to law in this matter; we desire to maintain cordial and respectful relations with the Government we serve. We asked the Government to consider our grievances with an equitable regard for its own interests and ours, to relieve the embarrassments which were tending to impair the full usefulness of a body of its servants, and to restore to us that prospect of a sufficient competence on our retirement which was one of the inducements held out to us to enter the Indian service. The proposal was one of fair and reasonable arrangements between the Government and its servants; it was not a legal demand. The Government having declined to listen to us we appealed to the House of Commons to inquire whether or not we had a case which merited consideration from the Government . . . . We asked respectfully for such an amendment of the conditions of our service as impartial inquiry might prove to a wise and equitable Government to be proper. We reject Sir John Gorst's invitation to resort to the Courts for the discussion of grievances which we have not based on legal title, and which can in fact only be redressed by the equitable action of Government." We have quoted this statement at length, as it is desirable that the exact bearing of the agitation to which several hundred servants of the Indian Government have unreservedly committed themselves should be understood by the general public. The important point is that there is unity of purpose in the demands made: that the appeal is for fair and equitable treatment of the Service as a whole, and that the suggestion to treat individual cases on their merits is firmly declined. No doubt there are a number of Uncovenanted officers who could in a court of law establish their claims to receive their pensions in gold, but success in isolated cases would not mean a triumph all along the line—the variety of contracts alone is a bar to this. As to Sir John Gorst's argument that the House of Commons has divested itself of all powers of interference with the revenues of India, ten Acts of Parliament passed since 1858 are quoted to show that his contention is groundless; and it is significantly added that the revolution which resulted in the refusal of the cotton duties cost the Indian revenues upwards of a million sterling. There can be no doubt that a vote in Parliament could to-morrow bring about at least some mitigation of the grievances under which the Uncovenanted Service in India now labours.

BENGAL.

(July 28.)

Mr. BRAJENDRANATH DE, Bengal Civil Service, having obtained the degree of honour in Sanskrit in the 1st Division, receives a donation of Rs. 5,000.

IF it is decided to dismantle Loudon's Buildings, Calcutta this year, it is probable that accommodation for the offices occupying them will be found in the late King of Oudh's palaces at Garden Reach.

THE Bengal Government has published a long list of new rules for regulating the conduct of education by District and Local Boards and by Union Committees, and, if no valid objections are raised within one month, these rules will come into force.

DISTRICT officers have, with the sanction of the Government of Bengal, been authorised to distribute rewards up to Rs. 100 in all cases under section 77 of the Excise Act, without reference to higher authority, and whether the fine imposed is realised or not.

SOME objections were lately made by the British Indian Association to the rules framed for the experimental introduction of the system of payment of rent by postal money-orders in the Burdwan division, but the Lieutenant-Governor, after consulting the legal advisers of the Government, has decided that the rules cannot be altered, and that it is impossible to do more than simply to declare that postal money-orders must be received in payment of rent. The issue of such orders will be modified from time to time by the regulations of the Postal Department.

The Pioneer states that from all accounts the engineers on the Bengal-Nagpore Railway have of late had their lot cast in, by no means, pleasant places. The Agent is at present in England, and the Superintending Engineer is on leave; but work on the Bengal Division of the line is being carried on by the remaining members of the staff at high pressure in face of considerable hardships. In the remote districts of the Brahmani river the breakdown of the cartage has made it almost impossible to get stores, and the price of rice and gram has more than doubled, in some places even quadrupled. A break in the rains during the first fortnight of the present month, too, brought with it a great deal of fever and dysentery. Two-thirds of the workmen were down—in one subdivision the percentage of sickness was as high as 95—and within ten days a hundred deaths occurred. In circumstances such as these the claim of the men in the jungle districts to special allowances is clearly one which merits generous consideration. Fortunately, there is no reason to doubt that this will be accorded by the Board.

MADRAS.

His Excellency the Governor of Madras has accepted the Presidentship of the Presidency branch of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, rendered vacant through the departure of Lady Connemara for Europe.

The Maharaja of Dumraon, acting on the suggestion of his intelligent Dewan, has, says the Morning Post, initiated steps to promote a scheme of emigration on a large scale to Upper Burma, with a view to relieve the congested population of his Raj. The scheme has met with the cordial approval of the Bengal Government, and an extensive tract of country has already been leased by the Maharaja on which to settle those of his tenantry who care to seek, in a new country, the competence which is denied them in their own land. Dewan Rai Jai Prakash Lal Bahadur, recently visited Burma to personally select the land, which the Maharaja has now leased. After considerable inquiry of, and consultation with, the authority there he secured several thousand acres on the borders of the Shan States, that locality having been specially recommended to him by the officials, both for fertility of soil and salubrity of climate. A considerable portion of the tract is virgin forest of valuable wood, and the process of "clearing" will also be remunerative.

The Dewán's scheme is to found Indian colonies on the land, the Maharaja paying all the expenses of such as care to emigrate there from Dumraon.

THE Chief Justice of Madras has addressed the Local Government showing that the temporary appointment of an additional judge on the High Court bench for another year, lately sanctioned by the Secretary of State, is insufficient to cope with the increased work of the Court. His lordship says that the strain on the judges is very great, and the permanent addition of a fifth judge is absolutely necessary if arrears must be cleared and work kept current. These views are being forwarded to the Supreme Government and the Secretary of State.

BOMBAY.

COLONEL L. P. PEACOCK, Political Agent in Ulwar, will officiate as Resident at Meywar during Colonel Miles' absence on two months' leave.

THE question of the transfer of Sind to the Punjab has, the Pioneer understands, been finally dropped, it being thought undesirable to make any alteration in the existing arrangement. The main consideration which influenced the authorities in coming to this decision is that Sind has ceased to be a frontier province.

COLONEL C. M. MOBERLY, M. S. C., Examiner of Guaranteed Railway Accounts, Bombay, has been appointed to hold charge, until further orders, of the office of Examiner of Public Works Accounts, Bombay, in addition to his own duties, with effect from the 7th ult.

MR. CUNRUDIN TYEBJI, senior partner in the firm of Messrs. Tyebji and Dayabhai, solicitors, died at his residence in Khetwadi at noon on Friday. The deceased gentleman, who was one of the leading members of the Mohamedan community of Bombay, was in his fifty-second year.

WE clip this from the Asian:—"Has land in and around Bombay suddenly become extremely valuable? We ask the question, as we see in a Bombay paper an account of the July meeting of the Bombay Natural History Society, in which we read that the Bombay Government has refused a certain asked for site for the Zoological Garden, without, at least, as far as the report goes, giving any reason for so refusing. In another column of the same paper we noticed a complaint that the 'building fee,' whatever that may be in that part of the world, had been increased 500 per cent., and no previous notice given. Was it because the probable 'building fee' from this particular plot of ground was of more importance than the spread of knowledge likely to accrue from the institution of the garden that the site was refused?"

THE following is a summary of the Bombay Presidency Season reports for the past week:—Rain general and sufficient, except in two talukas of Khandeish, where the crops are consequently unhealthy, and in parts of Nassik and Belgaum, where sowing is retarded; rain deficient also in parts of Dharwar. In two talukas of Surat sowing is retarded owing to incessant rain. Young bajri crop doing well in Ahmedabad District, except in taluka Sanand, where it is slightly damaged by caterpillars; young crops also being damaged by caterpillars in four talukas of Kaira. Transplantation progressing in Surat, Tanna, Rutnagherry, Kanara, Shikarpore, and Baroda, commenced in two talukas of Ahmedabad, and nearly completed in Kolaba. Fodder scarce in parts of Nassik, Ahmednugger, Dharwar, and Kurrachee. Water scarce in parts of Dharwar. Prices rising in one taluka of Nassik.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

(July 27.)

MR. HILL, who officiates as Inspector-General of Forests, arrives at Simla from Burma about Aug. 4.

AT the meeting of the Legislative Council on Wednesday next, the Cantonment Bill will probably be passed, excluding the clauses relating to house property.

IT is stated that there are 500 regularly licensed rickshaws at Simla. In addition to these, almost every house at the summer capital of India has its own rickshaw.

BRIGADE-SURGEON PILCHER acts as Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals in the North-West Provinces during the absence of Deputy Surgeon-General Rice.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab has ordered the continuance of the existing prohibition against the cultivation of the poppy in the districts of Hissar, Rohtak, Gurgaon, Delhi, Karnaul, and parts of the Sirsa district, which has been transferred to the Ferozepore district.

THE Maharaja of Dumraon, it is reported, has quite recovered from his recent indisposition, and is now busy with negotiations, which have for their object the securing of a befitting husband for his daughter, the Maharaja's only child. Rai Jai Prakash Lal Bahadur, the distinguished Dewan of the Dumraon Raj, has been entrusted with the selection of a son-in-law for the Maharaja, and he has been visiting Lucknow and other parts of Oudh to seek among the families of the more respectable of the Rajput talukdars for a worthy mate for the Princess. Who is to be the lucky man has not publicly transpired; but a selection has been made, and before very long, and in spite of the "hard times" in Behar, there will be "gay and grand doings indeed" at Dumraon.

THE death is announced of Sir James Marshall, K.C.M.G., who expired at Margate on the 9th inst. after a few days illness of pneumonia. He was the son of the late Rev. James Marshall, vicar of Christ Church, Clifton. He was born in 1829, educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1854, and called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1868. For some time he was classical master in the Birmingham Oratory School, and then went the Northern Circuit. He was appointed chief magistrate and judicial assessor to the Native chiefs of the Gold Coast in 1873. In the Ashantee war of 1873 he led the Cape Coast chiefs and levies, and received a medal for his services. He was Senior Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court in the Gold Coast colony 1876-9; Chief Justice, 1879-82; and Executive Commissioner for the West African Colonies at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition of 1886. He was appointed Chief Justice of the territories of the Royal Niger Company, in Africa, in 1887. Sir James married in 1877 Alice, daughter of the late Mr. C. Guillym Young, of Corby, Lincolnshire. He was created a Knight Bachelor in 1882, a C.M.G., in 1886, and a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in 1889.

SURGEON-MAJOR JAMES ADOLPHUS SMITH died on the 3rd inst. at Bhamo, Upper Burma, of intermittent fever at the age of 41. He was the youngest son of the late Mr. Richard Smith, surgeon, of Winchcombe, Gloucestershire, and was born in December, 1847. He became surgeon in the army in 1874, and served in the North-West Frontier of India campaign of 1876, in the course of which he was wounded, and also in the Egyptian expedition of 1882 and the Soudan expedition of 1884-5, for the former of which he received the medal and bronze star and for the latter the clasp. He was promoted to the rank of surgeon-major in 1886.

THE Commander-in-Chief has ruled that officers who served in Burma can avail themselves of the privilege leave by instalments, under the condition that it is to be completed in the year in which it is granted.

LORD AND LADY CLAUD HAMILTON are going to start shortly on a visit to India to Lord and Lady Lansdowne. Lord Claud has not been well, and is still looking very thin and worn, and it is hoped the complete change and rest may be of benefit to him.

QUETTA has suffered from severe floods. A number of houses have been demolished, and several bridges connecting the main thoroughfares have been destroyed. The damage done to the frontier railway is estimated at Rs.10,00,000.

THE CEYLON POLICE.—A Ceylon paper says:—"We think a distinct improvement in the working of the police can already be seen in consequence of the adoption of some of Mr. Giles's recommendations. The Calcutta system seems to answer very well. With five reliefs during the twenty-four hours, two by day and three by night, instead of keeping men on duty for twelve hours at a stretch, it is only natural that the police should be more on the alert. The good effect of stricter supervision is also apparent, the inspectors looking well after their men, more especially between 1 and 3 A.M., the time about which most burglaries are committed."

THE latest news from the Russian Tibetan expedition under Colonel Pevtsoff, which is following up the exploring work of the late General Prjevalsky, is dated from Yaka Kooduck on the 26th of June last. The expedition had just reached Yaka Kooduck, in the district of Yarkand, and expected to arrive at the latter town about July 7. At certain points the expedition had great difficulty in proceeding, in consequence of deep snow. All the animals passed safely, and only a few of the men caught slight colds. The Chinese received the mission in a friendly manner, and were offering assistance to further its progress. The scientific work of the party was going on satisfactorily. From Yarkand the expedition was to go through Khotan and Kiria to Nia. The expedition has passed through localities which have never before been visited by Europeans, and will ascend the river Yarkand Darya as far as the town of Yarkand. This part of the river has never been explored.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

INDIAN GRIEVANCE-MONGERS.

WE did not expect that our comments last week upon Mr. William Digby's extraordinary letter to the Members of the House of Commons would pass without a reply from that gentleman. In another column will be found his protest against our remarks, and his own reasons for the faith which is now in him that the Queen Empress's promises to her Indian subjects have been deliberately and systematically broken; that "a spirit is being engendered by the Government of India which in its exhibition is treating the Native States as Lord Dalhousie treated them, even going so far as practically to annex territory, without, however, possessing the manly courage to avow the policy carried out, or to call it by its right name; that "even where this is not done, a course almost equally bad is followed, with results most disastrous to the finances of the States interested, and lamentable in its effect upon the loyalty of the Indian people everywhere;" and that "there is good reason for believing that the course which is now being pursued is not only unjust and mischievous in itself, causing great distress of mind to and inducing fear and alarm in the minds of Princes of undoubted loyalty who are in treaty relationship with Her Majesty—dangerous to the prosperity of our rule in India, and certain to be fruitful of harmful results." And Mr. Digby has not hesitated to state what, in his opinion, those results are likely to be:—"A second Mutiny may not be anticipated. That, probably, is not possible. But what is only second to an armed insurrection already exists, and will grow more and more serious. The Queen Empress, at this moment, is ruling a loyal, but also a dissatisfied and greatly alarmed people." The italics are ours, and we would refer to them in the spirit of the old Scotch lady who, on being asked by her "minister" what she thought of his long and eloquent sermon on the Crucifixion, exclaimed, "Eh! minister—its terrible! but let us hope its no true." As Dean Ramsay is responsible for the anecdote it cannot be deemed irreverent. It can certainly be very aptly applied to Mr. Digby's harrowing description of the sufferings of India at the hands of the Indian Government; only we do not hope that his description is untrue; we know it to be so. Let us, however, not be misunderstood as bringing a charge of intentional falsehood against Mr. Digby. We are quite prepared to accept his assurance that he believes in the statements which he has published, but his individual faith in himself and in his clients does not necessarily make believers of others. The assertions of misrule and mal-administration on the part of certain Native Princes made by Sir Lepel Griffin were not made for the first time in the paper which he read before the Colonial Institute. They are to be found in official records in the archives of the India Office, furnished, not by Sir Lepel Griffin only, but by other Political Agents and Residents under the responsibility of their several positions as servants of the Indian Government. There was a time when extracts from the Annual Reports of the Governor General's Agents were more available to editors than they are now—a time which surely Mr. Digby must have some recollection of—and it is to be regretted that the reticence which now prevails should encourage Indian "grievance mongers" to pen "diatribes" against British rule in India. Mr. Digby, who seems proud to be associated in this pernicious profession with Mr. Bradlaugh, can hardly expect those who know India better than he does himself to submit with patience to be told that English gentlemen who are posted to high official offices there forget not only what is due to the honour of England and English rule, but are dead to a sense of personal honour likewise. For if Sir Lepel

Griffin, Major Barr, Colonel Parry Nisbet, and Sir John Gorst, serving as officers of the Crown, have acted in the unjust, tyrannical, and deceitful way in which it is more than suggested they have done in Mr. Digby's pamphlet letter, they have ceased to be reckoned as honourable men in any condition of life. But it is because we do not believe in Mr. Digby's suggestions, founded, as they are, on Native assertions made in that reckless and truth-regardless way in which only disloyal natives of India can assert, that we condemn him and the work which we regret to see he has put his hand to. Mr. Bradlaugh's self-appointed rôle of Indian agitator may be looked upon as a pitiable and contemptible performance—the result of vanity and ignorance—but we are sorry to know that crass ignorance of India such as is Mr. Bradlaugh's privilege is not Mr. Digby's also. Mr. Digby knows something of the country, its peoples, and its princes, and we regret to find that he is turning that knowledge to such questionable account. We publish to-day what he deems to be a reply to our strictures on his letter. If this be all that "a grievance-monger has to say for himself," it is very little. There is certainly no case for argument. Mr. Digby's charges of misconduct on the part of Indian officials are not strengthened by tabular statements of Population Returns and Census comparisons. He has made sweeping assertions against English rule in India, which may serve the purpose of grievance-mongering, but which deserve only the treatment which they have had at our hands. This much, however, we may say in Mr. Digby's favour. We believe his loyalty to be stronger than his logic.

IT is reported by telegram that the Viceroy's reply to the Maharaja of Kashmir has been published in India. Lord Lansdowne points out temperately and argumentatively that the Maharajah's conduct has left the Government no other alternative than that of accepting his voluntary proposal to retire from all executive interference in matters of State; but the letter holds out a future possibility of the restoration of the Maharajah's authority, if by reformed conduct he should exhibit his fitness for rule.

A HINDOO WIDOW RE-MARRIAGE.

Mr. Madhowdas Rugnathdas, the well-known Hindoo social reformer and an ardent advocate of widow re-marriage among his caste, has given further evidence in support of his claim to the title of reformer by causing another widow re-marriage to be celebrated in his bungalow at Girgaum on July 8th. Through the instrumentality of Mr. Madhowdas, about twenty-eight widow re-marriages have been brought about among the Gujrati Hindoos in Bombay and elsewhere, no fewer than sixteen of these re-marriages having taken place under his own roof. Mr. Madhowdas's bungalow has for a long time been known as an asylum for such Hindoo widows who choose to break through the custom of the caste, and have the courage to enter into a second matrimonial alliance. Mr. Madhowdas is not only affording protection to these widows, but usually spends large amounts of money in getting them re-married. It is said that he has already spent about Rs. 10,000 out of his hard earned money towards the celebration of the several widow re-marriages which have taken place at his own bungalow and under the auspices of a society which espouses the laudable cause, and of which he is the moving spirit. It will be remembered that Bai Kassibai, a Hindoo widow, applied last week to Mr. Ryan, Second Presidency Magistrate, to afford her protection from the threatened persecution of her kith and kin, who had not left a stone unturned to thwart her from carrying out her intention of re-marrying. Bai Kassibai, who is a native of Gogo near Bhownugger, requested the magistrate not to issue any legal process against her at the instance of her parents at Gogo, or of any one on their behalf in Bombay, on one charge or another which might be preferred against her by way of annoyance and for the purpose of preventing her from re-marrying. Mr. Ryan, after hearing the tale of the widow, gave her a note of introduction to Mr. Madhowdas, who, he said, would give her every protection, and would, besides, see that her intention was carried out without any delay, Bai Kassibai accordingly went to Mr. Madhowdas, who not only gave her shelter, but arranged for her re-marriage with Mr. Dulputram Hirjee, formally a teacher in one of the Anglo-Vernacular schools in Bombay, but who is now a dealer in silk cloth and such like articles. Mr. Dulputram, who is about thirty years of age, is also a native of Gogo, and belongs to the same caste as that of the widow, who is now about twenty years old. Bai Kassibai, who is a young lady of comely appearance, can read and write Gujrati and cast accounts, and it is said that her new husband intends to teach her Gujrati up to a higher standard by way of qualifying her for the post of a mistress in one of the local schools. At the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Madhowdas, a large number of native ladies and gentlemen, who support the cause of social reform, gathered at their bungalow at Girgaum, which was brilliantly illuminated. Among those present were Messrs. Lukhmidas Khimjee, K. N. Kabrajee, N. G. Chundavarkar, Atmaram Pandurang, Y. M. Modak, Cursondas Chabildas Lulloobhoy, Goculdas K. Parukh, N. R. Ranina, N. B. Masani, Vurjrai Suntokrai, and a number of other gentlemen. After the marriage ceremony had been performed by a Brahmin before the sacred fire, the newly married couple were made to sign a paper, which contained among other conditions of the contract one to the effect that the husband should give to the wife Rs. 101 as pin-money. At the close of this and other formalities, Mr. Vurjrai Suntokrai Desai, Deputy Educational Inspector, delivered a short speech in Gujrati, wishing them every success in life. He eulogised the efforts of Mr. Madhowdas and his worthy conscrt in the cause of social reforms—principally the cause of widow re-marriage—and observed that Mr. Madhowdas by his singleness of purpose and persistent perseverance had accomplished great good to the community. It was, he said, deplorable that some of the leading members of the Hindoo community should throw obstacles in the way of social reform. In conclusion, he thanked, on behalf of Bai Kassibai, Mr. Ryan, the magistrate, for his kindness in affording protection, and giving wise counsel to the lady. After the distribution of flowers and pan supari the company dispersed.

SURVEY WORK.—Colonel Thuillier's report shows that the party employed on the trigonometrical surveys has completed the 370 miles remaining of the secondary triangulation along the east coast of India. The secondary triangulation was also carried out for an aggregate length of 270 miles by parties employed in Beloochistan as a basis for topographical surveys in that region. The work of the geodetic party comprised measurement of seven arcs of longitude in Southern India, and the tidal survey party continued its observations with self-registering tide gauges at several stations along the coast, where tidal observatories are established and connected with the operations of spirit levelling. Geographical surveys have been carried out vigorously in Upper Burma, nearly 21,000 square miles having been surveyed and mapped on an half-inch scale. Reconnaissance along the Nepal boundary has supplied a rough basis for a more accurate and detailed survey of the Northern Frontier when an opportunity offers. Interesting additional information regarding Bhootan and Tibet has been obtained from the adventurous travels of Native explorers trained and sent thither by the department. Of the new maps 4,062 were published during the year, and heavy demands continue for trans-frontier maps and maps of Upper Burma. The photographic and lithographic offices show the large outturn of 1,203,861 copies during the year, including high class illustrations for archæological and other reports.

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

Mr. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes:—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole proprietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

ESTABLISHED 1833.
EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 6th Aug.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 4th Aug.; and from Calcutta to the 4th Aug.

THE meeting of the Legislative Council, fixed for 31st July, was postponed till the 14th Aug., as no business was pressing for disposal.

THE HON. MR. HUTCHINS will shortly introduce a Bill in the Legislative Council, empowering the Government on the occurrence of a vacancy in the post of Administrator-General in Bengal to create a similar office in each Province where there is independent jurisdiction. At present the Administrator-General exercises authority from Burma to Biluchistan. When the post becomes vacant separate officers will be appointed under each Local Government, each of whom will discharge the duties of Official Trustee.

THE opinions of the agents of guaranteed railways and the managers of chief lines in England upon the Indian Railway Bill have been received. They are to be carefully considered and the measure brought up again during the cold weather session in Calcutta.

IT is probable that the English Act relating to confidential State papers will be adopted in India, whereby the illegal publication of such documents will become a cognisable offence.

THE Government of India have received information confirming the statement that the Transvaal Government have ordered all British-Indian subjects out of the country. Representations will probably be made through the Home Government.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR will probably attend the Cavalry Camp of Exercise at Muridki during the last week in January.

SIR H. M. DURAND goes home on one year's furlough in the autumn. Mr. W. J. Cunningham, Under-Secretary, will act as Foreign Secretary in his absence.

SIR EDWARD BUCK and Colonel Strahan left Mandalay last Sunday, having arranged a programme for the survey and settlement of Upper and Lower Burma. Sir Edward Buck returns to Calcutta, Colonel Strahan remaining in Rangoon for a few days to inspect the survey parties in recess there. The Chief Commissioner will visit the Chindwin districts.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST has returned to Quetta, having settled the dispute among the Zhob tribesmen. No further trouble is expected in that quarter.

GENERAL ELLES, the Adjutant-General, has left Simla for England.

COLONEL SPEARMAN, Commissioner of the Mandalay Division, is reported to be seriously ill at Bassein.

CONSEQUENT on Colonel T. Deane taking charge of the Remount Department Colonel Toker acts as senior Deputy Secretary in the Military Department, Major Broadbent officiating as junior Deputy.

COLONEL R. C. HART is confirmed as Director of Military Education in India vice Colonel Taylor, resigned.

THE Brigadiers at the Muridki Camp will be Colonels Lance, Bird and Pennington.

MR. JUSTICE HILL, on the closing of the Calcutta High Court at the beginning of September, takes four months' leave to England, after which he will revert to the Government Prosecutorship at Allahabad.

MR. J. A. BAINES, of the Bombay Civil Service, has been appointed Census Commissioner, and joins his appointment at Simla at once. The census will be taken early in 1891.

THE editorship of the Calcutta Review will be changing hands shortly, though the change has nothing to do with Mr. Bradlaugh. Mr. H. A. D. Phillips is going on furlough early next year—or possibly sooner—and has therefore arranged, after bringing out the October number, to make over the magazine to Mr. H. H. Risley.

MESSRS. G. CARMICHAEL AND BONUS, of the Bombay Civil Service, have been temporarily added to the Burma Commission. In connection with the general paucity of Civilians from which the Administration is suffering, Messrs. Forbes, Petre, and King, of the Political Department, will probably return to their respective Provinces—Madras, the N.W.P., and Punjab—at an early date.

MR. A. R. COLQUHOUN has been dismissed from the Burma Commission as unfit for civil duty, and remanded to the Public Works Department, to which he orginally belonged.

MR. GRIESBACH has been posted to Biluchistan, there to carry on geological investigations into the mineral deposits of the country.

MR. H. IRWIN goes from Mount Abu to Madras as Consulting Engineer to the Local Government, with the rank of Superintending Engineer.

MR. JUDGE, the "Britannicus" who so strenuously opposed the Ilbert Bill during Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty, died at Darjeeling on July 29th. He was over seventy years of age.

THE Viceroy has formally recognised Raja Amar Singh as President of the Kashmir Council in the place of his brother Raja Ram Singh, superseded.

THE strength of the Tibetan outpost in Garwhal is said to be only some eight or ten men. It is therefore deemed too contemptible to be interfered with.

THE last section of the Indian Midland Railway was opened for traffic on August 1st, and this great system with all its primary branches is now finished.

THE Governor of Kandahar pays a visit shortly to Chaman to see the site of the new railway station below the Khojak. He will be entertained with due hospitality.

IT is intended to make a reconnaissance during the next working season for possible lines of railway eastward from Mandalay, as well as from a point further south across the Shan plateau towards Western China. The survey of a branch line from the Shwebo district to strike the Chindwin in the neighbourhood of Kalewa will also be undertaken.

A COURT-MARTIAL is summoned to meet at Secunderabad on the 2nd inst. for the purpose of investigating several charges of embezzlement against Major W. Creighton, of the 7th Hussars, in respect of about Rs. 8,000 from the mess and regimental coffee shop.

DHULIP SINGH has again sent a manifesto to the Native papers at Lahore, asking for contributions of money from the people of the Punjaub and others throughout India. It is styled "A Royal Proclamation."

GOVERNMENT has sanctioned the re-arming of the Presidency police with proper breech-loading rifles and revolvers.

SOME rather serious landslips have occurred at Darjeeling and Simla.

NOTES.

THE issue of the new Four per Cent. Loan has been very satisfactory in India for those fortunate enough to have their tenders accepted. Immediately after the closing the stock went up a half per cent., thus making an immediate handsome profit on the investment. The total amount of Bombay tenders accepted was Rs. 66,17,000, while the amount applied for is said to have been two crores and thirty lakhs.

STRIKES are the fashion not only in England but in India. We imagine that the idea came originally from the East, which has nothing to learn from the West in the way of enforced idleness. A short time ago there was a strike in Calcutta of the carters, or hackery-wallahs; the papers by Overland Mail to-day mention a strike of the railway coolies at Howrah, and the Bombay Municipal sweepers, who went on strike last month for an increase of pay, have struck again because their grievances have not been redressed. "Hundreds," we are told, "assemble and sit on the maidan all day." Besides these, we learn that the Banian grain and provision dealers at Baroda have struck work and closed their shops, and that the employés of the chief mills at Surat have also struck. It seems "striking" everywhere.

ONLY an Englishman who had never dined at a Highland regimental mess on a guest night could go into a rhapsody about the melodious noise of the bagpipes. This will, perhaps, explain the following, culled from an Anglo-Indian contemporary:—"We hear that the 30th Bombay Infantry (3rd Battalion Belooch Regiment) has been allowed to use bagpipes instead of fifes in the band of the regiment. We have not a shadow of a doubt that the Pathans and Beloochis, of whom the regiment is mostly composed, prefer the savage swell of the pibroch rather than the whistling notes of the fifes. The globe-trotter from Scotland, if he chance to run through Sind, would, perhaps, be startled on a sultry morn, say, in Hyderabad or Jacobabad, to hear the wild music of the slogan within a few yards of him. Melodies that he had been apt to associate with mountain glens and lonely isles, bleak and chilly, would thrill him with sensations beyond the ken of our limited 'Border' knowledge. But this is a circumstance unquestionably foreseen by the Beloochis, for we believe that they are fast becoming proficient in the use of this musical wind-instrument, and play nothing else but the wild, stirring, and descriptive airs of Lochiel. As battle music there is nothing more inciting to bloodthirstiness than the war-notes made to issue from the bagpipes, and we hope that the Belooch Battalion will ever meet with the same success in arms that generally attends those who rush into the fray to the savage swell of the slogan. In Byron's words, may 'the breath which fills their mountain pipe so fill the mountaineers with the fierce Native daring which instils the stirring memory of a thousand years.'"

BETTER, however, to have to listen to even a competition of pipers than to have to listen, as the House of Commons refused to do on Thursday evening, to the strains of Sir George Campbell's drone during the many attempts he tried to make himself heard. Bagpipes may be endured in silent agony; but the House could not afford Sir George even that concession. Honourable members "howled" and "groaned" as he rose to speak, and it was only on one occasion, when he mentioned that he had mislaid or forgotten to bring his notes, that he was complimented with "loud cheers." The great "Hooghly Bore," as he used to be called in Calcutta, was, however, as callous to criticism as a "chaunter" itself, and continued to do his best to empty the House by his cracked cadences, which fell on all unwilling ears.

The Times Calcutta correspondent telegraphed a short time ago the extraordinary statement that a Native barrister had been detected stealing a sword from the Bombay Arsenal. This story having now reached Bombay has naturally caused considerable indignation amongst the members of the Bar in that city, and a local paper, righteously indignant, says "that such a charge should be hurled at a respectable body of men is intolerable, and not to be endured." Certainly not; but what was the foundation for what the same paper justly calls a "diabolical libel?" Only this—that the Bombay Gazette in reporting some pilferings from the arsenal had stated that a Native burnisher was found to have a sword of steel hidden away in the small of his back. On the strength of this announcement the Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphed to the British public that a Native barrister had been discovered robbing the Bombay Arsenal.

THE following suggestion written to the Pioneer on the subject of "Staff Corps Annuities" seems well deserving of attention:—"The pensions accorded to all officers now entering the Staff Corps, and all those who have done so since 1881, are so distributed, according to varying periods of service, that an officer, unless he has private means, cannot possibly retire until he has attained sufficient service, viz., 32 years, to secure a pension of £700 a-year. Surely a scheme of the kind obtaining in the Civil Service could be devised, so that the addition of a sterling annuity, subscribed for by Staff Corps officers, could be added to their allotted pensions. Of course, the lower rates of pay drawn by military officers, as compared with Indian Civil Servants, would preclude the idea of any large addition being made to an officer's pension; but I see no reason why something like an annuity of £200 a-year might not be obtainable, say, after 24 years' service. If such a scheme were introduced it would not only benefit officers wishing to retire, but would not fail to quicken promotion in regiments and departments. If the Government did not feel disposed to take up the matter, could no leading insurance company be found willing to take it in hand as a separate fund totally unconnected with their other business, and subject to the control of a board of military directors who would act as trustees?"

THE Governorship of Bombay will shortly be vacant, owing to the expiration of Lord Reay's term of office. Rumour is already busy with the names of probable successors to the office, amongst whom mention is being made of the present Postmaster-General, Mr. Raikes, and Lord Harris. We do not know why a Fleet-street correspondent of the Yorkshire Post should be quoted by the London press as an authority, but according to him Mr. Raikes would not care to relinquish his present position for even an Indian Governorship and £10,000 a year, whereas Lord Harris is likely to accept the offer if made to him, as he "may have been disappointed" when Lord Connemara was sent to Madras instead of himself.

It need hardly be said that this information had better be taken with some grains of salt.

GOOD news for the holders of shares in Indian gold mines. A financial contemporary says:—"The rise in Indian mining shares which we spoke of as probable more than a fortnight ago has come sooner than the market expected, and it has found jobbers very short of stock. So far the advance has not been very large or very general, but that it will make further progress is highly probable, especially if those who buy shares now insist upon delivery within a reasonable time. The Mysore Company is doing exceedingly well, and there appears to be no reason to doubt that the dividend at the rate of 60 per cent. per annum lately declared will be maintained." It is to be hoped that all the above may prove to be "gospel;" but the shareholders in Indian gold mines, with the exception of those in the Mysore Company, have been waiting long for dividends with that sickness of heart which hope deferred is said to cause. It has still to be explained why so many of the "wild cat" schemes of Transvaal promoters take on the London market, while so many sound Indian investments languish for want of capital.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE REFORM OF THE INDIA COUNCIL.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Mr. Bradlaugh did not make a wise use of the India Council Reduction Bill when he made the motion for the second reading an occasion for asking for a general enquiry into the administration of India. The Bill, it is true, is a small measure, and the economy which may result directly from it is almost inappreciable—£6,000 a year at the most. But it has two aspects. It may be regarded on the one side as a measure of retrenchment, and so regarded it brings into view the whole question of the home charges, and especially of the very substantial portion of them which is debited to the India Office. Or it may be regarded as paving the way for certain administrative reforms in the India Office, which would not only lead to a saving in expenditure, but would yield increased efficiency in the Government of India in England and corresponding freedom and efficiency of administration in India. We are not discussing the matter here from the point of view of Parliamentary procedure, and we will not raise the question whether the passage of a Bill which is good in itself, and which may lead to things even better, ought to be placed in jeopardy by being confronted by an amendment on the second reading, no matter how well founded the amendment may be. Our own belief is the Bill should be thankfully accepted, but that the acceptance of it should be made an occasion for a candid and vigorous criticism of the present constitution of the India Office. There is the more reason for this course in the fact that Lord Cross has shown an unusual readiness to listen to suggestions upon this subject that have been made to him by the usual exponents of well-informed opinion in India. No one supposes that the Secretary of State's intentions are limited to a reduction of £6,000 a year in the expenditure of the India Office. The fact that the reduction for which the Bill provides is only facultative forbids that idea. As a measure of economy, it would be so disappointing—first in the amount available for retrenchment, and then in the uncertainty whether even that small amount would be saved—that it may safely be inferred that Lord Cross regards the economical side of the Bill as of quite secondary importance. It is so regarded in India, and public opinion in this country will be deeply disappointed if the project should be avowed by its authors to be anything less than a preparation for the reforms in the constitution of the India Council which have so long and so persistently been demanded.

The case for these reforms was presented with peculiar energy last year because a grave scandal in which the India Office had acted badly and inefficiently had given peculiar emphasis to it. The evidence in the Deccan Mines Inquiry threw an unwelcome but significant light upon the manner in which the India Council assisted the Secretary of State in discharging the obligations of the Imperial Government to its feudatories. The work, we saw, was done worse than perfunctorily; we saw also that the very body which Parliament had devised for supplying the Secretary of State with the knowledge and the judgment of experts knew nothing of the matters on which they pretended to advise him and were careless of the trust imposed in them. The episode brought nothing new to light; it only confirmed and emphasised familiar objections to existing arrangements at the India Office. It showed once more the inefficiency of the agency by the help of which the Secretary of State controls and—the word must be said—sometimes obstructs, the action of the Supreme and Local Governments in India. Long before this we had had flagrant instances of the pernicious efficiency of the Council and of cliques in the Council in preventing or delaying the execution of measures upon the necessity of which public opinion and official opinion in India were equally unanimous. India would have been the richer by crores but for the obstinacy with which a clique in the India Office, for the sake of a crotchet, obstructed the natural development of our railway system. It has been the same ever since the constitution of the Government of India in England has occupied the attention of Parliament. The special theme of half the debates that have been devoted to this subject has been the cumbersome and inefficient nature of the machinery by which the English end of the rope has been worked. Mr. Bright's indictments of the India House forty years ago had this in common with his own and every other indictment of the India Office in more recent times, and it is not astonishing that impetuous critics now and again advise that the rope should be cut unless the machinery by which it is worked can be improved. We ourselves have never joined in the cry for an abolition, root and branch, of the Secretary of State's Council. But it has always seemed to us that there would be an immense advantage in reducing both its proportions and its functions. One advantage of reducing it by a third will be that greater care will be exercised in the selection of Councillors. When he has only ten seats to keep filled, the Secretary of State will be more likely to select only the best available men than when he has fifteen. The temptation to make unwise extensions of tenure will be much smaller, and there will be some chance that the Council of Ten will be composed of men fresher from personal contact with the practical problems of administration in India than some of those on the present Council of Fifteen. It would, indeed, be disappointing if, in the smaller Councils of the future, which are promised in this Bill, there were to be found veterans wise only in the wisdom of the generation that has gone, and eloquent only on men and things of pre-mutiny days. The Bill must change all that, or it will be a mockery, a delusion, and a snare. With a reduction in the proportions of the Council, we look also for a reduction in its functions. We want less, not more, intervention by the India Office in the details of administration in India. That the main lines of Indian policy should be under the control and constant supervision of the Minister responsible to Parliament for the righteous Government of this country is a constitutional necessity. No one asks for change there. But if the statesmen at the head of the Indian administrations are as carefully chosen as they are believed to be, if England sends her best men to grapple with Indian problems in situ, and if the personnel of Government in India is half deserving of the praise that is constantly being bestowed upon it by English statesmen at home, we may fairly ask that a freer hand should be given to people on the spot. If there must be a supreme court of appeal against the follies and blunders of Viceroys and Governors, and the finest bureaucracy in the world, the tribunal ought to be one that Indian opinion will respect, and not one of which it is profoundly contemptuous, as it of the India Council as at present constituted.

If the activities of the India Office were kept within their rightful limits, a very small Council would suffice, and it is in this direction that reform and retrenchment must be sought for. If we understand the matter rightly the change embodied in this Bill does not stand alone. Several months since we announced, on the authority of our London correspondent, that the Secretary of State had appointed a departmental committee to report upon ways and means of reducing Indian expenditure in England, and that a reduction in the number of his Council would probably be carried out. Lord Randolph Churchill's idea of a Commission "let loose" among the departments is suggested in this connection, and no one will doubt that if a retrenchment commission were "let loose" in the India Office, it would find an abundance of material to work upon. The big total of a quarter of a million sterling, which represents the cost of the administration of India in England, is a standing invitation to retrenchment, and it would be well if in the debates arising out of this Bill a serious invitation were addressed to the Government to grant a detailed enquiry into the expenditure of the India Office. A departmental enquiry will not do. If it is to be effectual it must be conducted by a committee of the House of Commons, and if the raison d'être of every item of the annual expenditure of the Office is challenged, it will be nothing more than the enormous cost of the establishment warrants. The Colonial Office, which has a considerable part of the earth's surface under its surveillance, costs a sixth part of the sum which is expended here—much of it not only wastefully, it is believed, but harmfully, so far as it is employed upon machinery which clogs the apparatus of administration in India. No one believes that justice is done to the tax-payers of India in allowing so large an annual expenditure to pass without challenge or revision. There would be nothing invidious in such an inquiry as that supposed. More invidious, indeed, would it be to allow the India Office to escape the investigation to which the expenditure of every department of the administration in India was subjected the year before last. Whoever asked for a detailed enquiry into the expenditure of the India Office would indeed be asking for nothing more than a completion of the work entrusted to the Finance Committee in India by Lord Dufferin's Government. There would be a regrettable incompleteness in the enquiry if the £240,000 a year which is spent by the India Office were any longer to remain without being looked into.

THE SHAN STATES.

(Rangoon Times.)

The peace and prosperity enjoyed by the Shan States certainly speaks volumes in favour of the administration of Messrs. Hildebrand and Scott. Traders are beginning to realise the fact that Mandalay is not the real trade centre, as it was supposed to be in the king's time. Many of them are giving up the route by the old Natteik Pass in favour of the new road which leads direct to the Meiktila road railway station, and which even before the extension of the railway on the other side to Myingyan is likely to become one of the most important stations between Pynimana and Mandalay, and to largely develop its carrying traffic with Rangoon. The new head quarter station for the Superintendent of the Shan States is not yet decided on, but it is thought likely on the abandonment of Fort Stedman next year that it will be fixed at Toungyee or Mone. The latter place is rather far off, and the road to it during the rains is so difficult that the head quarters will probably be fixed at Toungyee, unless the officiating Superintendent in his constant tours hits upon a more practicable spot. A very severe cattle epidemic has this year almost denuded portions of the States of cattle, the mortality amongst buffaloes being particularly severe. This has made it impossible for the people to cultivate their fields to the extent they otherwise would have done, and will make it impossible for the Shan States to export grain next year, as was at one time thought probable. All they can raise will be required for home consumption. But, although this cattle disease has undoubtedly caused inconvenience and distress to those immediately affected by it, the people generally are happier and better off than they have been for years. Quiet and order prevail where formerly all was anarchy and confusion. The people look up to their Chiefs and loyally carry out their slightest wishes, whilst the Chiefs look up to the Superintendent and are apparently working loyally with him, and sinking their former jealousy and distrust of each other. The rivalry between them now is of a healthy kind, not to take each other's lives or seize upon each other's territory, but to strive to overcome in the arts of peace and trade.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

We recently referred to the new avenues of employment opened to women through the changing circumstances at home. If we turn now from England to India in order to see what occupations women are engaged in here, a reference to the census returns of 1881 helps to give an idea of the large share that female workers take in the industry of the country. We are warned that the figures given under this head are very incorrect, owing to the many instances in which women have been entered in the returns as following the same trade as the male heads of their families. But still in spite of errors due to this cause, the tables give us at any rate a rough idea of female work in India. The magnitude of the figures is rather appalling. Over eighty-six millions are returned as persons of no stated occupation. Even when this immense figure has been subtracted the totals under each head are very large. About nineteen million women are returned as agriculturists, two million as dealing in vegetable food and three million as workers in cotton and flax. Ninety-four thousand are priestesses and temple officials, and seventy five thousand are physicians and druggists. No women are returned as belonging to the Navy, but sixteen thousand are found under the head "Army," of whom Madras possesses over 12,000, so that it would seem that the benighted Presidency disputes with Dahomey the honour of having the largest number of the fair sex in its army. Among the male population of India it would be easy to enumerate from the census tables a good deal more than 1,000 ways of earning a living. But it would hardly be worth while to write a book on the subject, as usually in India the restrictions of caste save parents the trouble of selecting an occupation for their sons and daughters. It is, however, interesting to notice in the Indian census tables the large number of industries most characteristic of India. The immense respect for the cow in this country is justified by the fact that nearly 200,000 men, besides women and children, support themselves as cowkeepers. The rarer elephant only counts some 5,000 attendants, and about the same number minister to the wants of the camel. Six people get their living out of the crocodile by catching him. Devils give support to a certain number of persons who perform the important office of devil driving. Over 118,000 sell or make pan, ganja, gadak, bangh, and other narcotics and intoxicants. One hundred and thirteen persons, called jalagars, of whom 102 belong to Mysore, search tanks and wells for lost money and jewels. Among other occupations that sound strange to European ears we find in the census castemark makers, ear cleaners, ear and nose piercers, gamblers, pilgrim conductors, givers of information about festivals, panegyrists, receivers of deadmen's clothes, jokers, hail averters, and between four and five thousand makers of brazen and wooden images. On the other hand, some industries that give occupation to very large fractions of the English population are very rarely followed in India. For instance, in the last census only about 5,000 persons, male and female, were returned as miners out of the whole population of India, while the agriculturists amounted to seventy millions. In great Britain at the same date there were more than half a million of miners to only 1,400,000 agriculturists. No fact could be adduced to show more clearly how well India and England are suited to supply each other's wants.

A FAIR CHALLENGE.

(Bengal Times.)

Prejudice dies hard. No matter how ill-founded and groundless, let it take hold of a man's imagination and to eradicate it seems almost hopeless. It is so with Act I. of 1882, which a defunct Native journalist, with an idiotic attempt at humour, nicknamed a Slave Law. From that day to this Native writers have never ceased to designate it by its fanciful title and to rail in every tone of frenzied declamation in choice Babooese against "the brutal planter," whose alleged favourite pastime is to strip women and cane them, to confine men in dungeons, and generally to starve invalids to death. In the interludes of these pleasant pastimes they vary their jocularity by hilarious exhibitions of pistol and rifle practice, under a thin veneer of sport, subject young coolie females to what we must leave to imagination, and in a lively, light-hearted way perform amateur surgical operations on coolies' limbs. So far as garden work is concerned, that, of course, is merely a cheerful fiction, since a garden manager's hardest work consists in entertaining his friends, pegging, smoking, card-playing, occasional games of polo, and such innocent diversions as may occur to gentlemen having nothing to do, with plenty of Native agency to assist them. This pleasant life, so full of enjoyable excitement, has been partially made a subject of inquiry in Parliament, and Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, who is apparently far more conversant with tea garden routine than our oldest and most experienced tea planters, has undertaken to illustrate this new chamber of horrors of tea-planting life to the wondering gaze of a British senate. When he means to begin we have not learnt definitely, but his programme is in course of construction, and at any moment Reuter may flash across seas the ominous fiat "tuppence more and hup goes the donkey." But whatever the effect of Mr. Bradlaugh's vulgar fictions and newspaper misstatements, truth, being great, will prevail, and Mr. S. Hogarth, of Jaipore Tea Estate, Dibrugarh, has placed it within the power of any association or body interested in eliciting a coolie's circumstances on a tea garden to ascertain them by taking advantage of a fair and honourable challenge, which must either be accepted or calumny hide its head in shame. Mr. Hogarth says in a letter to our Hare-street contemporary, dated 1st instant :—

"It has often been asked why tea planters do not take steps, not only to refute accusations of the Native Press and political agitators, but to prove that coolies are, as a rule, happy and contented on gardens. I wish to make the following offer to Native gentlemen who profess to take an interest in their countrymen in Assam. I shall be glad to receive a couple of representatives to visit and report on these gardens. I will give them the run of the place for a week. They shall be free to see the coolies at their work and in their lines ; to inspect the garden pay books, registers, hospital arrangements, and our system of feeding sickly coolies. In fact, everything connected with the working of a tea garden shall be open to them. I will arrange for their accommodation while at Jaipur, and for their travelling from Dibrugarh to Jaipur and back ; and will promise that they shall be treated with every attention and courtesy. I may mention that this is a very favourable opportunity for an inspection, as, 1st. The Gardens have had a high percentage of deaths, and are on the Chief-Commissioner's Black List. 2nd. There is no magistrate of any sort within 35 miles. 3rd. The road between this and the nearest magistrate is almost impassable during the rains. 4th. There are about 1,000 Bengali coolies here, of about fifty different jats, and all imported under Act I. of 1882. On my side, I bargain, 1st. That the visitors must be Native gentlemen of some social standing, and must be introduced by some well-known official or gentleman, or by some recognised society. 2nd. That, should there be any defect in the working of the coolies, or any suggestion that they have to make for the benefit of their countrymen, that they communicate the fact to me in writing, while at Jaipur, in order to get my explanation. I should naturally expect them to send me a copy of any report they made. I will leave this offer open during the months of July, August, and September, but I cannot undertake to be present after that. I am not going to commence a correspondence in the papers with anyone on the coolie question. If any Native gentlemen wish to accept my invitation, they can arrange a visit through the Chairman of the Indian Tea Association. "S. HOGARTH.

"Jaipur Tea Estates, Dibrughur, July 1."

Tea planters have, for several years past, borne with singular placidity, attacks upon their body in reference to coolie treatment, which, though spiteful and absolutely, absurdly untrue, have hardly provoked a retort, probably because too contemptible for serious notice. If those would-be philanthropists —self-elected and self-commendatory—who have dared to advance them, will now step forward and agree to Mr. Hogarth's offer, they will at least prove their desire to acquire a knowledge of their subject ; if not, it will be well for them to betake themselves to their hireling propensities and continue to sustain their readers on the literary rubbish that suits them so well.

DHULIP SINGH AGAIN.

The Civil and Military Gazette publishes a copy of Dhulip Singh's last production in the way of manifestoes, which have been placed at that paper's disposal by the editor of a Native journal to whom, amomg others, it was addressed :—

Beloved fellow-countrymen,—It is with feelings of deep gratitude and sincere pride that we thank you for the offer of your lives to the sacred cause of freedom, of which we are the champion. But as you say that you have no money to give, it becomes necessary for us to explain how small a sacrifice is asked of you to enable us to enter India with a European army and deliver you from the accursed British Raj.

Beloved fellow-countrymen, you number in all India some 250,000,000 souls, and if each one of you would subscribe only one pice, during eight or nine months, the required sum would be raised, and surely this is within the means of all.

Believe not that this money is for our personal use.

Our personal necessities are provided for from our own slender resources, and you must bear in mind that all contributions will be receipted for with tokens by authorised agents, appointed by us conjointly with the Committee of Organisation, and that upon our return among you these tokens will be redeemed by us, with the addition of their annual interest of 50 per cent.

Sri Khalsa Ji! For you our cause is not only national, but also religious. You number about 8,000,000, in the Punjab, and we believe that to none of you will it be a great hardship to lay by, in the name of Sri Garu Govind Singh Ji, one anna each month during eight months' time.

And above all things, do we desire that those who contribute should send on delegates to the Committee, to take part in its deliberations, and to superintend the expenditure of the funds which are subscribed for the purchase of arms and ammunition.

To our brother Princes also do we address an earnest warning.

Beware of England's perfidious designs! Reflect upon the bearing of that late speech, at London, of Sir Lepel Griffin! It is a threat for the future which must not be neglected; and, in our opinion, if a stop be not put soon to the nefarious policy advocated by this Englishman within thirty years from now not one among you will be still upon his throne. The system of peaceful annexation has already begun in the case of the Maharaja of Kashmir, and unless you all unite in an indignant protest against this outrageous attempt at spoilation, his sovereign rights and dignity, like yours, will soon be at an end, and notwithstanding the solemn promises to the contrary of Her Majesty the English Queen in her Proclamation of 1858.

The moment is fast approaching when you must choose between independence and eternal slavery. The great Emperor of Russia has spoken words which show that the hour of conflict is nigh, in that conflict England must be arrayed against our friends, and it will be your own fault if those friends do not come to our assistance.

And in provision of the future we decree that from the date of this our present Royal Proclamation.—

1. Cow-killing is absolutely prohibited throughout all Hindustan, and as compensation to the Mahomedans, who have hitherto enjoyed this privilege, they will receive from the Hindus a pecuniary indemnity, which shall be paid upon our arrival in India.

2. The payment of all taxes to the British Government is forbidden: and the population is hereby commanded to refuse compliance with every order for their collection; all who disobey this decree will be properly punished later, and in the meantime should be put out of caste immediately by yourselves.

3. The public debt of India is hereby repudiated, and all Railway and Telegraph Lines are confiscated. But such natives as may have held stock in either of the above, for a period of at least three years, prior to the publicatiou of this sovereign decree, shall be secured against all loss.

This exception applies to Natives only, and only to those who, by their acts, shall have proved themselves to be genuine, practical patriots.

4. All debts upon which the interest exceeds 5 per cent. per annum are abolished, except where the lender can prove that he has contributed liberally to the success of our mission.

5. All persons imprisoned by the British authorities shall be released from confinement, and their places in jails shall be occupied by those who, having means at their disposal, have refused to subscribe to the fund for the liberation of their native country.

6. All persons who have suffered from the tyranny and injustice of the accursed British Government will be reinstated as far as practicable upon their thrones and in their rights, after a scrupulous investigation of their grievances.

7. As soon after our return to India as circumstances will permit, a plebiscitum will be held in every province, not under the rule of any Native prince, and the people called upon to select the Government of its choice. For example, Bengal will be permitted to try the virtues of a Republic.

8. All Hindus, Brahmins, Sikhs, Mahomedans, and Christians are invited to offer up prayers to God for our speedy triumph; and upon furnishing evidence that they have so done all shall be rewarded according to the well-known liberality of our ancestors, so soon as by the aid of the Almighty and the material support of Russia, we shall appear again among you as Conqueror.

As circumstances may oblige us to be scrupulously prudent, it may so happen that we may be prevented direct future communication with our beloved fellow-countrymen, who, in that case, are invited to attach to all proclamations issued by the Executive Committee the same importance as if they have our royal signature.

THE JUTE TRADE.

(Englishman.)

When the news was first received of the organised attempt to substitute cotton for jute bagging in America, we stated at length the difficulties which the movement was likely to encounter. It was shown that jute had an immense advantage over cotton in point of cheapness, and that to use cotton coverings for the six or seven million bales of cotton exported annually from the States would be to withdraw a large quantity of cotton from a profitable market. The Conference, however, had no doubt discussed the question fully before coming to a decision. On the one hand it was confronted with the fact that the Bagging Syndicate had doubled the price of jute coverings; and, on the other, it probably considered that some plan was feasible by which the charge for cotton bagging might be recovered from the purchaser. If the cotton bagging can be used again industrially, there is no reason why a charge should not be imposed to cover the original cost. Such a charge would be fair enough, and might enable the South to turn the tables completely on the Bagging Syndicate. We know that, apart from inflated prices, the jute bagging made in America has been a source of much dissatistion. Consul de Fonblanque declares that it has been universally condemned. At any rate, it is so bad as to be accountable for a considerable percentage of loss in the cotton trade. It is very open and inflammable, and it does not stand the tear and wear of handling as could be desired. The coarse cotton bagging that has been tried has proved a vastly superior article and now that daring speculators have seized upon the jute factories, the question of price has entered upon an entirely new phase. Jute that is doubled in price one year may be quadrupled the next, and it is not, therefore, to be wondered at that the South is prepared to make a powerful effort to escape from its helpless position. Hitherto it has been at the mercy of Trusts and Syndicates, but if it succeeds in its present enterprise we need not be surprised to see the American jute factories overtaken by disaster, and the Bengal staple driven out of the field for, at least, a considerable number of years.

THE DISTRESS IN BENGAL.

(Statesman.)

We have a very strong impression that our district officers are building too confidently upon the relief which the present seasonable rainfall will bring the people. It will lessen the distress greatly beyond doubt, but it will not bring the relief that the district officers are counting upon. Our advices of yesterday tell us, that "the condition of the people is most distressing." This is from Cuttack: and the writer adds, "if you go to the interior of the district, you will find numberless houses without any kind of food for the family or children. The scarcity is gradually assuming a terrible form in Cuttack and its neighbourhood. The men generally are labourers, and it is this class who are suffering most. It is an awful sight to see the wives and children of these labourers, who were used to living upon wholesome food, reduced to skeletons, from living upon leaves and wild jungle fruits. Some have not strength enough even to stand up to work. Husbands have abandoned their wives, and fathers their children, leaving them to beg from door to door. The case of widows again is heartrending. They have no clothing, as they have sold it for food, and the scenes witnessed every day are heart-breaking; and it is difficult to refrain from tears, at the sight of so many of the old and young begging from door to door for help, too often refused because there is no food to give them." Our conviction is very strong that the Government has not to this hour any right estimate of the distress that it has to cope with. Everyone acquainted with the history of these calamities will remember how uniformly it has been the case that the observations of our district officers have been of the most superficial character, where close inquiry was necessary to fathom the depth of the people's sufferings. At every such season multitudes of the higher classes retire into their own homes to die. The people are not given to obtrude their misery upon the public gaze, and unless efforts are made to ascertain their circumstances they lie down in despair and resign themselves to what they believe to be their fate. It is only by careful enquiry that the depth of the distress can be properly gauged, and it is here we are persuaded that our local officials fail.

THE CRUSADE AGAINST BEEF.

(Times of India.)

It is impossible not to admire the courage of a man who in a country ruled by Englishmen can put himself at the head of a crusade against beef. If he were by any possibility to succeed, every private soldier, from Quetta to Cape Comorin, would be in mutiny, and the mutiny could not be suppressed, for no British troops could be got to fight in such a cause. The slightest indication of a disposition to lay a disrespectful finger on the roast beef of old England would inevitably turn out the strongest Ministry that ever held office, Conservative, Liberal, or Radical. But no great reform was ever carried by men who aimed only at what was possible, and we shall watch with some interest the progress of the enthusiastic Sriman Swamy in his efforts for the improvement of Indian cattle. There would be more of hope in our interest but for a fallacy which vitiates his whole argument, and which is so transparent that we find it difficult to understand how even the force of his religious sentiments can make him blind to it. He speaks of the slaughter of cattle for food as one of the causes of the decrease in their numbers, as if he were speaking of gold, or petroleum, or some other thing of which the supply, however large, is limited, and must in time come to an end. But cattle reproduce their kind and multiply, while gold and petroleum do not; and if the rate of their multiplication is in any degree under human control, which it certainly is, then the existence of a demand for cattle, for whatever purpose, will act, not as a hindrance, but an incentive, to the increase of the supply. To make his argument of any value, therefore, the Swamy ought to have shown that the slaughter which he deplores reduces their numbers faster than nature can supply the loss. He not only does not show this, but he establishes the opposite with complete success. He quotes statistics to prove that millions of cattle die annually from starvation and preventible diseases, which means that millions of cattle are produced every year in excess of what the country can turn to account. They are, therefore, neglected, and left to die. If those which are slaughtered for the food of Europeans and Mahomedans were spared, they would have to be added to the total of those which perish by neglect and starvation, and the ryot would be poorer by their price.

THE U. C. S. PENSIONS.

(Times of India.)

The reply of the "Uncovenanted" Service to Sir John Gorst's speech is a document which seems likely to place that gentleman in a somewhat awkward position. Its tone is moderate and dignified, as the tone of such a document should be, but its facts are marshalled with skill, and its logic is irrefutable. The Under-Secretary's specious and half-hearted arguments are taken up one by one, and without any hard words or rough treatment are shown to be utterly baseless, while his principal contention, namely, that the House of Commons has no power to interfere with Indian financial questions, is effectually dissipated by a brief reference to ten out of a large number of instances in which the House of Commons has dealt direct with Indian financial questions without special reference to the India Office at all. It is shown also that the treatment of the Covenanted Service, though it is undoubtedly legal, goes beyond equity, and that the Government which appeals in forma pauperis to the English people against equitably adjusting the pensions of the "Uncovenanted" Service is already taking from the Indian tax-payers, for the benefit of the pensioners of the Covenanted Service, an amount approximately equal to that which would satisfy the claims of the "Uncovenanted." Since the Act binding the Government to the payment to Covenanted Servants of a pension of £1,000 if paid in England was framed, the pension fund itself has been a fiction. The salaries are debited in the accounts net after the four per cent. has been deducted, and the deductions are credited to no account whatever. Its very figures are hypothetical, and the Government has annually to squeeze out of the Indian tax-payer a sum equivalent to £53,000 in order to make up the deficiency. Here the Government can be liberal enough. Again, quite recently, in order to induce Royal Engineers to elect for continuous service in India, a liberal increase of some 40 per cent was made to the sterling pensions of officers so electing. Instead, however, of limiting the concession in the first instance to those who might in future elect, as should have been done, to ascertain whether or no the desired result would be attained, it was extended to those who had already committed themselves to an Indian career and had virtually become servants of the Indian Government. The result has been that the country has been committed to a large increase in the pensions of a number of senior officers already in its service, while very few junior officers have been induced to join the service. In fact, the men in the service have received a considerable present in enhanced pensions at the expense of the State, and the country has received no benefit whatever. When a Government acts in this liberal manner towards one class of its employés, the argument that it is not possible to increase the burdens of the Indian tax-payer for the growing necessities of the pension list is quite untenable. As to Sir John Gorst's suggestion—which was in the worst possible taste—that the "Uncovenanted" should get up a test case and take the matter to the Law Courts, it is shown clearly enough, as Sir John Gorst must have known when he so disingenuously suggested this course, that no test case could possibly be tried that would affect more than a very small portion of the European officers. In no two classes are covenants similarly worded, and in the case of a large number of officers there is no written contract at all. It is sneering at a just and reasonable claim to suggest that it be carried to the Law Courts in such circumstances as these. We trust the reply of the Uncovenanted will have the desired effect. The Government has made a great mistake, and has made it in such a way as to seriously imperil both its own dignity and the respect of the people. The best thing Sir John Gorst can do is to remedy the matter as gracefully as he can.

TIPPERAH.

(Bengal Times.)

Like the towers of Ilium, Tipperah is tottering to its base, Evil portents are in the air, corruption is sapping at the foundation of political stability; public confidence is wrecked; financial problems demanding immediate adjustment are tangled and complicated out of all hope of unravelment, and reduction to the status of a political nonentity, which means little short of effacement, is a question of time alone. There has been no period since 1872, when a political agency became necessary, in which Government has felt justified from holding aloof from admonition and counsel that repetition of past misgovernment will inevitably culminate in serious measures of suppression; but, deaf to advice and caution alike, the Maharaja has continued his career of mismanagement, and his State to-day is a mere hot-bed of intrigue, unenlivened by even temporary glimpses of prosperity, unrelieved by ever so slender a hope that, left to its own rulers and devices, Tipperah will not become a scene of ruin to itself, and of possible danger to our Government. Up to date of establishing a political agency, our rulers had allowed Tipperah practical independence to an extent that caused its Chief to believe himself safe from restraint, and this, together with a Supreme Court ruling that no question of succession as Chief could be adjudicated by any British Court, and a formal demarcation of British territory from Independent Tipperah, supported an insane notion among its officials that we had ceased to exercise any sort of jurisdiction over its affairs, because we had forfeited all right to do so. A spirit of hostility to British rule—affected or honest, we do not and cannot know—seems to have crept into the Maharaja's council, and there to have found ready acceptance, as any pretext would that is calculated to stir up inimical relations with our politicals. A correspondent writes of its present king that he is entitled to a salute of thirty guns, yet no treaty has been entered into between our Government and his, thus proving his independence. Tipperah Rajah's nomination to the guddee in 1862 was a mere formality, his real investiture taking place some eight years subsequently; and a couple of years later it was found necessary to appoint a political agent, although he vehemently protested. At that time measures of pacification were adopted to try and win him over to something like concern for his subjects' welfare, a letter from the then Viceroy couched in friendly language being addressed to him thus:—

"The Viceroy assures you that there is nothing further from his intentions than to adopt any policy which will cause a reduction of your power and influence."

He was assured further, that it was not "His Excellency's wish or intention to interfere with the lawful and proper exercise of your authority over your subjects." But notwithstanding all these friendly admonitions, his Highness remained implacable, and forced upon Government steps it was most reluctant to adopt. Tipperah was in partial anarchy, so far that there appeared to be no system of proper administration, its ruler's debts were accumulating, his sons were utterly neglected, and prohibited from interference in all State matters, responsibility for misgovernment attached itself to neither person nor department. It was then and only then our political agent at Tipperah was asked to draw up a comprehensive plan that would check or stamp out existing evils and obviate a recurrence. His reply, part of which we quote, will afford some insight into the radical nature of changes necessitated:—

"Before appointing an Administrator for Hill Tipperah and a Manager under the Collector of Tipperah for the zemindaries in British territory, both officials being directly subordinate and responsible to Government, and quite independent of the Maharaja, who, with others of the Raj family and Thakurs, would get monthly allowances suitable to their rank and requirements, I should suggest the following arrangements as the mildest form of interference possible. Jubaraj Regent.—The Jubaraj to be appointed Regent, and to have a Minister for Hill Tipperah and Manager for the zemindaries under his orders. Minister.—An able deputy-magistrate (a Hindoo of Central or Western Bengal, totally unconnected with Eastern Bengal, especially Dacca) should be appointed Minister of Hill Tipperah on the present Minister's pay (Rs. 1,000), including contribution towards pension. He should have all the powers vested by the Maharaja in the present Minister regarding Hill Tipperah, and he should be directly responsible to the Regent. Manager.—The appointment of the Manager should be revived, and given to a European, who should have the same powers in the zemindaries as those which the Minister would possess in Hill Tipperah. The post might be offered, of course, only with the entire concurrence of the Regent, to the late Manager, than whom there is no one better acquainted with the details of the management of Chakla Rashnabad. The revenues of Hill Tipperah should be devoted to the payment of all expenses connected therewith and those of the raj family and Thakurs. The surplus income of the zemindaries, after paying Government revenue, cesses and collection expenses, should be appropriated towards the liquidation of the bonded and other debts due in the British territory. The Maharaja should receive a suitable allowance, but he should have no authority whatever in respect either of Hill Tipperah or the zemindaries. All such authority during the present Maharaja's lifetime should be vested in the Jubaraj as Regent. The Assistant Political Agent has sustained the good reputation that he has earned in the previous year, and has shown himself intimately acquainted with everything connected with the State."

And here for to-day we leave his Highness. How long this fine State with its strategical points, as involved in our relations with frontier tribal clans is to be left to its ruler's vagaries, is a problem in political ethics we should like to see solved.

SURRENDER OF DESERTERS FROM THE NATIVE ARMIES.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

A very important decision arrived at by the Government of India some three or four years ago, regarding the surrender of deserters from the Imperial army taking refuge in a Native State, would seem to require a slight modification now that the British Government has decided upon accepting the services of a portion of the armies of Native States for the defence of India. It appears that it had been customary with the Native States to comply with requisitions from officers commanding Native regiments in our army for the apprehension and surrender of sepoys who had deserted; but when similar applications were received from the Native States the the British authorities declined to comply with the request As one of the Native States thought itself wronged in this respect, the matter was referred to the Government of India for a definite decision. It was then laid down as follows:—In the first place there is no complete reciprocity between the Imperial Government and a Feudatory State, and the British Government is entitled to demand from Native States far more than they can claim from the British Government. This is a fundamental principle of the Indian political system and is fully recognised in the Extradition Law. Were full reciprocity to exist, the relations of the Government of India with Feudatory States would be of the nature of International Law, which they are not. In the second place, there is a large difference in degree as to the importance to be attached to a British deserter and one from a Native State. The first forms part of the Imperial Army of defence, and protects the Native States quite as much as the immediate subjects of the Queen in British India. A deserter from the army of a Native State represents nothing of the kind; he forms no part of the Imperial system of defence of Hindustan, but is one of a force maintained by a Native State for purposes of police or State. There is consequently no prima facie reason why his surrender should be demanded any more than that of a civil employé in a Native State. This decision was given in 1885, but the latter part of it would appear to be unsound now that the Government of India has accepted the offer of Native levies, which will, of course, form part of the Imperial Army of defence, and, in case of emergency, they would protect the immediate subjects of the Queen in British India quite as much as they would protect the Native States. If the Government of India, therefore, still feels disinclined to surrender deserters from Native States, it will have to raise some other political principle upon which to base its refusal. The decision on the surrender of deserters from armies of Native States was given in 1885, and was based upon the representations of Sir Lepel Griffin. But although given in 1885, the decision was not made public, that is printed as a memorandum, till the beginning of this month. It seems to us to be a mistake for the Government of India to publish the decision at all now.

THE SUGGESTED COLONISATION OF KASHMIR.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The most important part of Sir Lepel Griffin's address to the Royal Colonial Institute was, of course, that in which he advocated the colonisation of Kashmir, and there are other signs in the air that this question may soon become one of practical politics. Every year since the Government of India sold Kashmir to Golab Singh we have, at intervals, published articles more or less directly advocating some scheme of colonisation; but in view of the well-known antipathy of the rulers of Kashmir to anything like European invasion of their territory, such recommendations have always been tentative and conditional. However numerous might be the advantages to England of a well established English, or English and Eurasian, colony in Kashmir, the disadvantages to India, if such a scheme were carried out with a high hand and in spite of all protest from those concerned, would be much greater. It is very easy for Sir Lepel Griffin or any one else with half his ability and experience to show that the State of Kashmir stands in every way upon a different footing to other Native States. It is easy to argue that the territory which was sold for political purposes a few years ago may be bought back to-day without injustice, if political exigences require it. It is easy to assert that the mere act of purchase from the British Government has not conferred upon Golab Singh's descendants the right divine of kings to govern wrong; and that it is not only the privilege but the plain duty of the British Government to take back a trust which has been betrayed, to rescue land which was unwittingly handed over to tyranny of the worst description and to save a miserable peasantry from the fate which our own folly in previous years has brought upon them. Nothing is easier than to show that any such phrase as the "annexation" of Kashmir would be a misnomer, and that if the Government took back from Golab Singh's descendants the charge which they have mal-administered it could not fairly be described as anything more than the redemption of Kashmir. It is equally true, as Sir Lepel Griffin insisted, and as the Times says, it is well that the British public should be told, that the duty of a British Government in India is to the people rather than to the rulers, and that the claims of a misgoverned and ill-used populace should outweigh the right of any Prince, however ancient his lineage and undoubted his title to sovereignty. A fortiori is this the case in Kashmir, where the ruling family is a modern creation, with claims resting merely upon the act of purchase, while the Government has been of a kind which has rightly been held up to the other States in India as an example of every thing which a Government ought not to be.

On every ground, therefore, it would seem at first sight the plain duty of the Government of India to rescue the natives of Kashmir from the miserable lot to which they have been reduced, and at the same time to utilise the maladministered territory for the best Imperial purposes. This is what Sir Lepel Griffin demands and the Times rather cautiously endorses. This, too, we may add, is the line of argument which has been taken over and over again by ourselves. We do not, however, consider that the Government of India has been altogether to blame in refusing, hitherto, to adopt the course thus recommended. Those who know most of Indian politics know how little these can be guided by abstract principles of right and justice. Although it may be the easiest thing in the world to show that the position of Kashmir is different from that of other Native States, nothing would be more difficult than to convince the ruler of any other Native State that the fate of Kashmir to-day might not be that of his territory to-morrow. It would be easy to show that Kashmir has been disgracefully misgoverned; but to the average native Chief our ideas and principles of government are hopelessly and unintelligibly high. Strive as he may, he always feels assured of falling far short of the British model; and he has no guarantee stronger than precedent that the British Government will not one day turn upon him and take his power from him, on the ground that he has abused it. His estimate of human nature is not high, and he would believe that the real motive for the exceptional treatment accorded to Kashmir arose from the utility of the country to us; and that its misgovernment was only used as an excuse. Similarly he will believe that, if his own territory should at any time appear desirable for colonisation or for other purposes, instances of misgovernment will easily be found sufficient to class him with Maharaja Pertab Singh as one who has betrayed the trust imposed in him by the British Government. The whole tone of Sir Lepel Griffin's address would justify this belief, and the adoption of the policy advocated towards Kashmir would be regarded as merely the first step in this direction.

From this it will be seen how the hands of Government are hampered in doing justice to the inhabitants of Kashmir by the consciousness of the evil effect which intervention in that State would have upon most of the other Native Chiefs in India. In the second place, it is extremely doubtful how any such measure would be received by the Radical party at Home. The Maharaja of Kashmir has already bought up the votes of a section of the Native Press, and for a very moderate expenditure in rupees could probably command the Congress. For purposes of Radical obstruction in Parliament this would be more than sufficient, and Mr. Bradlaugh would be supplied at once with a mandate from the people of India to protest against the act of usurpation contemplated by the Government of India. It would be pointed out that Kashmir has ever been among the foremost of Native States to offer assistance in men and money to the supreme power. It would be shown that his Highness Maharaja Sir Pertab Singh has been generous in his contributions to such excellent undertakings as the Countess of Dufferin's fund and the Aitchison College, and it would be asked how a ruler thus generous to benevolent objects in British India could be the monster of iniquity he is said to have been towards his own subjects. To members of Parliament, ignorant of Eastern ways, such a question would apply pertinently enough; and for the use of members of Parliament, ignorant of Kashmir, abundance of evidence would be forthcoming to show that the natives of Kashmir were, on the whole, admirably well governed, and that the outcry raised on the subject of maladministration was only the expression of the insatiable earth-hunger of the British Government in India, which had recently swallowed Upper Burma on just such an excuse. Any Government of India, therefore, which undertook to adopt strong measures with the Kashmir Government, might find itself attacked on many sides, and we doubt whether such lectures as that delivered by Sir Lepel Griffin to the Colonial Institute are likely to make the task any easier. If a healthy and intelligent public opinion could be created on the subject at Home, and if the Native Chiefs of India could be led to see the injury done to them, by the inclusion in their number of black sheep like the present Maharaja of Kashmir, or if the administration, which has been set up in the Maharaja's stead, would expressly invite British colonisation of the country, matters might be different. But under present circumstances we doubt whether affairs are ripe for settlement on the lines which are most likely to give permanent contentment to the Happy Valley and lasting security to our North-West frontier.

THE STAFF CORPS.

(Times of India.)

An announcement has just been made which is full of interest to the student of Indian Army organisation. It is stated that, owing to the constant drain on the Madras Staff Corps for officers to go to Upper Burma to replace casualties from sickness, etc., in that favoured spot, young officers of the Madras Army are no longer to be considered eligible for appointments in the Punjab Frontier Force—a decision which will be the cause of grievous disappointment to the young officers aforesaid. But can anything bring out more strongly the extraordinary anomalies of the Staff Corps system than this very necessary injunction? Why should the Madras Staff Corps at any time furnish officers to the Punjab Frontier Force? What possible connection can there be between the two? But questions like these may be asked by the hour without any satisfactory answer being forthcoming. In India, to say a thing is an anomaly is not necessarily to condemn it. From the very nature of the case, our rule in this country, however harmonious and coherent as a whole, is made up of many contradictions. But when, after the great crash of 1857, the whole Indian Army had to be reorganised, nothing more curiously ineffectual than the Staff Corps could have been invented. We are not about to inflict on our readers the oft-told story of that gigantic muddle. The question is, is there any chance of its being done away with? We fear not. The Simla Commission has recommended that it be abolished, but the Simla Commission has recommended many other things that have not come to pass. The Staff Corps has certainly been the most costly toy that any Army has ever found itself possessed of. It secured a system of promotion under which nearly everybody became Colonels, and these Colonels had to be heavily bribed to leave the service. It turns out Generals who have never commanded anything, and Field Officers by the dozen who never by any chance put on uniform. It sends a man into the Pay Department as a Subaltern, and as he sits at his office desk month after month, and year after year, his only battles being with the punkah coolie, who is apt to fall asleep, and his only victories being over his brother officers when he succeeds in cutting their pay; it promotes him successively to Captain, Major, and Colonel, finally sending him home to Bath, where, as a retired General Officer, he exposes the designs of Russia, and criticises the strategy of Germany. If in a time of profound peace the Madras Staff Corps is not able to satisfy the demands on it, what would take place if anything serious happened? As we said before, there is no conceivable reason why the Madras Staff Corps should furnish officers to the Punjab Frontier Force, but its present inability to do so is the latest exposure of a ridiculous system. The evil is by no means confined to Madras. In all three Presidencies the local Staff Corps is a source of weakness to the Army it is supposed to furnish with officers.

BENGAL.

(August 4.)

THE Englishman hears that a party of engineers is at present at work in making observations between Midnapore and Calcutta with a view to a survey for a railway, probably in connection with the Bengal-Nagpore Railway, and that Mr. Bell is, or was lately, at Midnapore collecting information.

THE Bengal Government has issued a circular to the mills asking them for their opinion as to the manner in which effect can be given to the wishes of the Secretary of State for India, that in the proposed Factory Act it should be enacted that four days per mensem must be given to the mill hands. As far as Bengal is concerned the mill hands get their Sundays free. In Bombay they work all the month through.

A CALCUTTA paper observes:—"In all probability shortly after the cold weather has set in Calcutta will witness military operations on a scale never before known in this corner of India. The Commander-in-Chief, it is presumed, wishes really to see what could be done if the city were to be attacked by a hostile fleet, that fleet having eluded the British men-of-war in the Bay, and having successfully negotiated all obstacles in the way of torpedoes, mines, and other destructive implements of war with which the Hooghly had been plentifully sown. The regiments to take part in these manœuvres will be the Buffs, the East Surrey, which will have arrived from Allahabad, and the Leinsters. The latter are being relieved by the East Surrey, but will be detained to take part in the operations. The 3rd and 38th Bengal Infantry and the battery from Barrackpore will also be present. It only remains, if the scheme is carried out, for our Volunteers to join. The Naval Artillery in their steam-launches, and perhaps with the new torpedo boat, if the authorities will lend her, ought to give a good account of themselves."

HAJI NOOR MAHOMED ZAKARIA, the secretary to the local Mahomedan Merchants community, has, the Englishman states, received a telegram from Johannesberg stating that the Transvaal Government has decided to class British Indian merchants with Turks and Chinese as aliens, and has peremptorily ordered them to leave the towns within its territory. A number of Indians have settled in the Transvaal, as under the terms of the London Convention they have a right to do, and their investments in goods and buildings represent a capital of some £300,000. At Johannesberg, the centre of the well-known gold fields of that name, and about 30 miles from Pretoria, these Indian settlers form a very important and influential part of the population, with a large share of the trade. As expulsion would mean ruin to most of them, the necessity of immediate action for the purpose of securing them in the enjoyment of their rights as British subjects is sufficiently apparent; and it is to be hoped that neither the Viceroy nor the Secretary of State, to both of whom an appeal has been made by telegram, will be at all dilatory in the matter. The high-handed injustice, involving a downright breach of treaty, of which the Boers have shown themselves capable, is so much of a piece with the arbitrary proceedings of the Portuguese in the Delagoa Railway affair as to warrant the belief that an understanding between the two to check the spread of British influence in South Africa by every means in their power really exists. It is time that both should be brought to their senses by whatever peremptory measures such selfish and lawless folly may appear to call for.

MADRAS.

(Aug. 4.)

LORD CONNEMARA will reach Simla about Oct. 5 and wil remain there a fortnight.

MR. H. IRWIN goes from Mount Abu as Consulting Engineer to the Madras Government with the rank of Superintending Engineer.

MR. J. D. GOLDINGHAM, late Father of the Madras Civil Service, and Judge of Bellary, retired from the service last September, and will leave Bombay to-day for Europe.

THE Madras Government has ruled that Customs duty should be levied on spirits imported by private contractors for the use of the Government Departments, such spirits not being Government property at the time of importation. As the contractors have objected on the ground that no such rule has been hitherto enforced, the question has been referred to the Government of India for decision.

BOMBAY.

DURING the month of June 27,462,442lbs. of cotton, worth Rs. 73,67,9C9, was shipped from Bombay for foreign ports.

THE following is a summary of the Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week:—Rain during week general. Total fall insufficient for sowing in parts of Nassik, Poona, Ahmednugger, Satara, Belgaum, Dharwar, and Ahmedabad. Young crops suffering for want of moisture in parts of Poona and Ahmednugger, and damaged by floods in parts of Kurrachee and Shikarpore, by locusts and breaches in canals in parts of Hyderabad, and by caterpillars in parts of Kaira and Kattywar. Standing crops otherwise good, except in Dharwar and three talukas of Khandeish, where they are middling. Sowing and transplantation progressing generally. Fodder scarce in parts of Kurrachee, Hyderabad, Nassik, Poona, Ahmednugger, and Dharwar. Water scarce in parts of Upper Sind Frontier, Ahmednugger, and Dharwar. Prices rising in one taluka of Nassik.

OWING to the vigilance of the Bombay Police, the Native town has at length been relieved of a gang of seven Mahrattas, who have been concerned in no fewer than forty-five cases of burglary. The property stolen was of a most varied and miscellaneous character, the depredations of the gang having been carried on for the most part in broad daylight. The circumstances connected with the arrest of the men are as extraordinary as they are interesting. It seems that Inspector Guider ascertained that one of the party had dealings with a certain Marwarree at Nagpada, and forthwith went to that person's shop. While standing there he saw a victoria pass by, and noticing that the appearance of the fare belied his ability to indulge in the luxury of a carriage, had the vehicle stopped, and on questioning the fare, found, to his surprise, that he was one of the men for whom he was looking. Further inquiries led to the apprehension of the other members of the gang, who were placed before Mr. Ryan, at the Girgaum Police Court, who sentenced the principal offender to four years' hard labour, and five others each to three years similar imprisonment, and the receiver of the stolen property to three years and three months' hard labour.

AN interesting application has occupied the attention of Mr. Justice Parsons, at the Bombay High Court. The relatives of Bai Maneckbai, a young Hindoo lady of some seventeen years of age, applied to the judge for a rule nisi and an interim injunction to restrain one Valabdas Narotamdas from entering into marriage with Bai Maneckbai. It appeared that the father of the latter died in 1882, leaving a will entitling her to a legacy of Rs. 2,000 and a life interest in the remainder of his property, estimated to be worth Rs. 1,50,000. There was also a clause in the will to the effect that, if the betrothal of the daughter did not take place during the lifetime of her mother, the matter was to be left in the hands of the executors, who should always be three or four in number. Four executors, including the defendant Valabdas, were appointed to carry out the provisions of the will; but three of these died, and in the year 1867 defendant became the sole executor, but he did not appoint others to take their places in accordance with the will. At this time he was the husband of Bai Maneckbai's sister, but on his wife dying a few months ago he sought to contract a marriage with his ward. The relatives of the young lady at once raised a protest, but finding Valabdas was not willing to withdraw from his position as a suitor, made an application, as above stated, to effect their object, it being pointed out to the Court that defendant was in embarrassed circumstances, and was, in their (plaintiffs') opinion, desirous of marrying Bai Maneckbai simply to take advantage of the money left her. The Court granted the rule nisi applied for.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JULY 29.

A detachment of the 4th Battalion Rifle Brigade, which has done excellent work in Burma, consisting of thirty mounted infantry, under Lieutenants Mackenzie and Majendie, surprised three gangs of dacoits under Boh Kyee Tha at Natmouk. A dacoit leader and four men were killed, and the camp taken; also two Snider rifles, twenty-five muskets, and a large quantity of ammunition, dahs and spears.

A number of men of the Norfolk Regiment up the Chin are suffering from fever and scurvy.

Lashio, in Southern Theinee, is said to be elected as the headquarters of the Superintendent of the Northern Shan States. A guard of 300 military police is stationed there. The selection appears to be injudicious. It is ten days' march from the nearest military post, and was notoriously unhealthy in the Burmese times, it being called the grave of Burmese armies in consequence of the enormous number of Burmese soldiers who died there during the expeditions with the Shans. Twenty-five per cent. of the military police stationed there are in hospital, but this high percentage is exceeded at Mogok and Mogonug.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

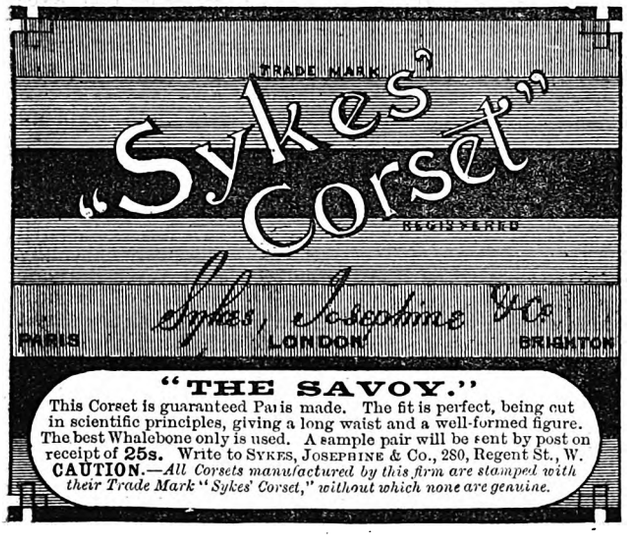
CHOLERA is said to have been very prevalent in Jullunder city during the past week.

THE meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council, fixed for Wednesday, has been postponed till Aug. 14th.

THE original debenture holders for two lakhs in the Egerton Woollen Mills are pressing the trustees to dispose of the property at once and to realise debts.

MUSSOORIE, not to be outdone by Simla, has started a Fine Arts Exhibition, which was opened last Tuesday by Sir George Greaves. From all the Pioneer hears the high arts are not likely to interfere seriously with the high jinks for which that captivating station has been hitherto celebrated.

THE ex-Ameer Yakub Khan has become dissatisfied with his present residence at Mussoorie, owing, it is said, to the death of a wife there, and has petitioned Government for another. The answer is that if Bellevue, which cost some Rs. 50,000, can be disposed of the Government are ready to fall in with Yakub's wishes, and buy or build him another house with the proceeds.



ANOTHER Golden Gang! but this time, an up-country paper hears, of their appearance on the Indian Midland Railway, where one Nagu Gunpat, a brakesman, made away with a parcel said to contain solid brick silver, but which actually contained 6,000 rupees in hard cash. Two others, Gulzar Khan (the brakesman who was booked out with the train from which the parcel was stolen) and a man who some time ago served the railway apothecary at Bina as a cook, are in the hands of the police, together with Nagu Ganpat, with whom every piece of the money was found. A great many thefts have of late taken place on the Indian Midland Railway.

THERE have been some rather bad landslips at Darjeeling as well as at Simla. The steps and part of the embankment at the Club fell into Auckland-road, and owing to the heavy blocks of accumulated earth below Kurseong the mail train has been delayed on one or two occasions. The worst slip reported is the carrying away of a part of the kitchen garden of Oakdene with its stone parapet, the mass falling on the roof of Army's Retreat, a house just below, and inhabited by Mr. Paul Mowis, the naturalist, his wife, and some visitors. The stone and earth crashed through the roof into the dining-room, burying an ayah with a baby, and a bearer, all of whom were happily rescued alive, although the man-servant sustained serious injuries.

THE Allahabad police made a clever capture on Wednesday last of a gang of coiners, whose operations have been disturbing the local money market for some time past. As far back as January it was discovered in the Bank of Bengal that there was copper coin about which was not that of the realm; and ever since the police have been endeavouring to trace its source, eventually with success. Through the instrumentality of an informer and a long ladder the men (three in number) were actually caught at their work in the upper storey of a house in the city, and in any case had no resource but confession. They appeared, however, to be much surprised at being committed to the Sessions, as they had not been making debased coin, but a full weight imitation of Government pice.

THE Cavalry Camp of Exercise at Muridki will last the whole of January, the regiments already named manœuvring for three weeks, when they will be joined by three or four others, and operations on a large scale be undertaken. The whole force will be split up into two divisions and separated by some sixty miles of country, over which they will work against each other under service conditions. Prince Albert Victor will join the camp and witness the manœuvres during the last seven days.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

EVIL OUT OF GOOD.

"Hell," it has been said, "is paved with good intentions." We do not question the good intentions of those ladies and gentlemen who, taking in hand a very unsavoury subject, succeeded in getting the House of Commons to interfere with the Government of India in a legislative enactment which it had put in force for the preservation of the health of the British soldier in that country. The "shrieking sisterhood" and their male supporters had certain field days at Exeter Hall and elsewhere, in which speaker after speaker, male and female, after their kind denounced the Indian Civil and Military authorities as pandering to the passions of a brutal soldiery and encouraging vice of the lowest type in the military ranks. This anything but attractive subject to men was discussed in a very unattractive manner by ladies whose purity of intention was beyond question, but who some way or another discovered a manner of handling very delicate matters in a very indelicate way. The fair protestors against imagined military wickedness were supported by certain ecclesiastical and Parliamentary faddists, with the result that "good intentions" carried the day, and paved —as it has since proved—a very infernal pavement throughout every military cantonment and camp in India. For it has now come to pass that in the Governor-General's Legislative Council a protest against the foolish resolution of the British Parliament, which weakened the hands of the Authorities in India, has been made by the Military Member of Council, supported by the Commander-in Chief, who stated a fact which surely ought to startle the sentimentalists, that the Army under his command had doubled its sick list in one particular direction since the purists had their way. From Burma Upper and Lower comes confirmation of a similar state of things amongst the soldiery there. The matter is a very serious one, and is not a question of mere morality alone, but one of State expediency. We are holding India, let faddists say what they will to the contrary, by the strong power of British bayonets, backed, we are glad to believe, by the loyalty of Native princes and peoples. But we know that that loyalty would not endure for a day were the bayonets withdrawn. This may seem to the sentimentalists a very Philistinic statement, but it is a fact nevertheless. The British force in India, considering the work it has to do, and the responsibilities entailed upon it, is a comparatively small one, and anything which tends to weaken its efficiency tends to jeopardise our rule in the country. This is what the British Parliament has done in order to conciliate the clamour of a set of sentimental agitators who, heedless of facts, and reckless of consequences, insisted upon a question of military efficiency being discussed in the spirit of Exeter Hall ethics only. Honourable members afraid of their seats at the next General Election allowed themselves to be led away by the "purity" clamour, and voted against the real interests and well-being of the very class —the British soldiery in India—that the "faddists" were pretending to protect. There was no cry from the peoples of India on which to found the agitation which was set up. Even the so-called National Congress failed to get an interest taken in the matter, and in their latest report—that of the Fourth Congress, held at Allahabad in December, 1888—it is recorded that "only three Englishmen and one Indian could be got to bring the subject before the Congress, and the one Indian carefully spoke upon other subjects, confining his remarks on this one to a few words at the very close of his speech."

The agitation therefore came from England, and was very English indeed in the manner of that "shrieking sisterhood" who one day clamour against the immoral instincts of the British soldier and another day ask permission to offer bouquets to a confessed adulteress and suspected poisoner. But the strange and sad result of permitting such agitators to influence votes in Parliament is that at any moment our power and prestige in India may be weakened, for we proclaim throughout that empire that India is not to be governed by the Viceroy and his councillors there, but by ignorant and foolish agitators at home. The lesson is a dangerous one to teach; it is a lesson very easily learnt, but its end will be—disaster.

A very severe punishment has been inflicted on the 2nd Battalion Middlesex Regiment, now stationed at Kamptee. This battalion has long been considered one of the best, if not the best, shooting regiment in India, but its reputation in this respect has recently, owing to certain irregularities, been considerably lowered. In the Bombay Army Orders of the 12th July it is stated that grave irregularities were committed on the rifle range by this battalion when at the annual target practice, and His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, Bombay Army, has directed that the battalion shall forfeit all musketry prizes gained during the last annual course, and that the "figure of merit" shall not be published in Army Orders.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CONSEQUENT on Colonel Deane taking charge of the Remount Department, vice Colonel Ben. Williams, proceeding on sick leave, Colonel Toker will act as Senior Deputy Secretary in the Military Department, and Major Broadbent as Junior Deputy.

LIEUT.-COLONEL F. GALLOWAY has assumed command of the Royal Artillery, Sind District; Lieut.-Colonel H. W. L. Hime, of the Royal Artillery, Madras District; and Lieut.-Colonel J. F. Brough, of the Royal Artillery, Bundelkhund District.

THE Lucknow Express states that Sir C. H. S. Gough, V.C., K.C.B., who has been promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General will vacate the command of the Oudh district at the end of the year, and will probably be succeeded by Sir John Hudson, now at Allahabad.

COLONEL H. R. B. WORSLEY, C.B., Colonel on the Staff, is granted privilege-leave from Aug. 12 to Oct. 10 next.

THE Macgregor Memorial medal has been awarded this year to Colonel Mark Bell for his explorations in Seistan and Persia in 1888.

THE subject for next year's prize essay of the United Service Institution in India is "The Organisation and Employment in war of Native Cavalry."

THE Prize Essay of the United Service Institution in India was that by Captain Duff of the 9th Bengal Infantry. He dealt with "The organisation of European and Eurasian subjects in India (including Volunteers) not belonging to the Army and Navy :—

(i) As auxiliary to the British troops;

(ii) For the protection of life and property locally, with a view to free as large a portion as possible of the regular army for service in the field."

CAPTAIN DUFF is in favour of the principle of compulsor

service being applied to India. Captain Mason, R.E., whose essay ranks second and is also to be published, is opposed to this principle, and puts forward a scheme for obtaining the largest number of men trained to bear arms without being subjected to compulsory service.

In addition to the coolie corps indented for by the Chief Commissioner of Burma for the Chin Hills, sanction has been given to the raising of 2,000 Punjabi porters for the expedition in the autumn from the Chittagong side. Probably only a portion of these men will be required, as mule transport will be used as much as possible.

The sudden death from cholera at Agra of Major E. F. J. Rennick, Assistant Commissary-General is announced.

The names of all past and present medallists of the United Service Institution of India are in future to be published in the Bengal Army List, in the same way as the medallists of the Royal United Service Institution are published in the Quarterly Army List in England.

The Government have sanctioned about Rs.50,000 for the construction of troop sidings at Hurnai which are urgently required for the embarkation and disembarkation of troops, &c., without coming in contact with the ordinary public traffic of the station.

The extension of the railway from Peshawur to Jamrud Fort, for which an estimate was sanctioned for Rs.5,57,194, is not to be constructed as an ordinary traffic line but as a military siding to be maintained ready for military purposes when needed. A revised estimate of cost will therefore be required.

By the death of Major Cather, commanding Royal Engineers in Burma, the service has sustained a severe loss. He was an officer of the highest merit, both as an engineer and a soldier, and was peculiarly gifted with that faculty of organisation which is so invaluable on active service. His war service in Afghanistan included the advance on Kabul, the after-operations about Sherpur, and the march to Kandahar. When the operations in Egypt for the relief of Khartoum were undertaken, he was instructed to raise a corps of 1,000 workmen on the Punjaub, and these he took to Suakim. Their services were of the greatest value, mainly because of the skilful way in which the corps was organised and controlled. Of the whole thousand all but one lived to return to India. Captain Cather's name, therefore, was one to conjure with in Upper India when the expedition to Upper Burma was ordered in 1885 and transport coolies were required. He was again placed in charge of a large number of men, and did excellent work on arrival at Mandalay. The organisation of transport in Upper Burma was no easy matter, but it was successfully accomplished, and thus the extended operations of the cold weather of 1886-87 were rendered possible. Captain Cather obtained a brevet majority and the Distinguished Service Order for his services, and he was specially mentioned by Sir George White in his last despatch. His name has now, to the regret of everyone who had served with him, to be added to the long list of officers who have succumbed to the Burma climate.

GANJAM

We have received the following telegram from the India Office.—

"From Governor, Madras, 20th August, 1889

"Condition Ganjam for week ending 17th August. Season continues very favourable; rainfall fairly heavy, and general average for 19 stations 1·77 in. during week. Numbers on large works 6,878, on small works 7,388. Numbers on gratuitous relief for week ending 10th August, 77,917, of whom 11,480 men, 18,932 women, and 47,505 children; total decrease 15,800, mainly children. Seventy-five relief circles constitued, and 63 kitchens established. Imports by sea 471 tons, by land 485 tons. Deaths from cholera 347."

RANGOON, AUG. 20TH.

The Rangoon Times announces that the complete revenue returns of Upper Burma for 1888-9 show an increase of Rs. 23,29,000 compared with the previous year, when the total receipts amounted to Rs. 50,16,000.

The land revenue exceeded that of last year by more than Rs. 5,50,000, and this large increase is regarded as proof that the province is becoming settled. Cultivation is largely increasing, and Upper Burma is now importing very little of its food supply. The people who left the country owing to the war are now returning.

The report that the Mingwoon Prince had left Pondicherry is officially denied

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Aug. 19.

—o—

INDIAN FORESTS.

General Goldsworthy asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, in view of the great importance of the public interests safeguarded by the Forest Department of the Central Provinces, the Government of India had taken any step to strengthen the staff of that department; and, if so, whether the Secretary of State had accorded his sanction to those steps.

Sir J. Gorst: The answer to both questions is in the affirmative.

Aug. 22.

INDIAN LADY GRADUATES.

Sir J. Kennaway asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was a fact that a lady, native of India, who had graduated with first-class honours at an Indian University, had been held to be ineligible to the scholarships instituted by the Government of India, and tenable in England; and whether there was anything in the resolution of the Government of India of February 12, 1886, constituting these scholarships to exclude women from their benefits; if there was not, would he communicate with the Government of India, with a view to throwing open the prizes of University education to all Her Majesty's subjects irrespective of sex.

Sir J. Gorst: The facts are as stated. The Indian scholarships were constituted as an experiment, and were intended for men only. The Secretary of State considers the decision of the Government of India right, and does not intend at present to make any alteration in the system.

THE CONDITION OF THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

In reply to a question from Mr. Bradlaugh as to the proposed measures for relieving the indebtedness of the Central Indian population, Sir J. Gorst said: This is a matter in which the initiative must be left to the Government of India, and the Secretary of State has not yet heard of any legislative action being taken by them. Careful inquiries have, however, been made regarding the condition of the lower classes of the Central Provinces. The conclusions arrived at were that the agricultural classes were, generally speaking, very well off, but that a deplorable amount of indebtedness existed. A very large proportion of the cultivating classes has been thrown, by extravagance, into the money-lender's hands, and is now practically at his mercy.

CEYLON.

BUDDHIST TEMPORALITIES ORDINANCE.

Sir J. Kennaway asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies what was the purport of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance lately passed through the Legislative Council of Ceylon by Sir A. Gordon; did it involve in any form the endowment of the Buddhist religion; and was an ordinance of this character subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

Baron H. de Worms: The purport of the ordinance is to vest the property belonging to the Buddhist temples in trustees appointed by, and acting under the control of, district committees elected by the Buddhist householders in the district, the object being to insure that the revenues of the temples are applied to their proper purposes. The ordinance does not involve the endowment of the Buddhist religion. The draft of the ordinance was approved by the Secretary of State before it was introduced in the Legislative Council, and the ordinance has been confirmed and allowed by the Queen.

Sir J. Kennaway asked whether this was not a distinct departure from the principle of non-interference in local government in Buddhist affairs.

(CONTRIBUTED BY THE PASSENGER.)

(Civil and Military Gazette).

Once on a time there was a strategical railway, and it lived in the dry bed of a stream; but the stream rose and ran amok, and that railway came to great grief (not so the engineer who built it).

The following are the experiences of a first-class passenger booked through at his own risk, and baggage very much prepaid.

The mercury stood high at Josephabad, and the railway officials rushed and carried the compartment containing iced drinks. There they discussed the drinks and the breaches in the line ahead (the passenger he lay low and very dry). When the iced drinks failed that train moved on!

Mr. Passenger reached his destination from Josephabad much to exhausted to send you an accurate account of the journey, but the following comments and incoherent utterances, due to apoplectic delirium, have been extracted from his diary—

A high official lived at each end.

A. wired B.: "Go down and repair the line."

B replied, "Go yourself."

Engineer staff working like slaves in broiling sun.

"Permanent Way" lent passenger a trolly without coolies.

"Traffic" lent him coolies without a trolly.

There being no departmental interchangability—except friction—progress nil.

"Why don't you move on?"

"Station Master won't give line clear."

Two hours later S. M. gives line clear—still no forrarder:

"What's matter now?"

"Please sar the engine-driver has no fuel."

"What's all that wood under your nose?"

"Please sar that wood belongs to Goods Department; how can I take for passenger traffic?"

"D——n your soul you useless son of a —— —— —— ——"

"Very well sar, I will wire."

(Last bottle of soda burst from heat apoplexy.)

Overheard outside the carriage:—

"Traffic could be resumed in two days, but for these engineers."

"Nothing but obstruction from these traffic fellows."

"D——d if I'll lend any more trollies to Permanent Way."

"Suppose we must get this first-class Johnnie through somehow."

"Not if I know it till I've completed mile 140."

"Oh! then lift him on to our trolly."

Conclusion:—Undersigned tenders his sincere thanks to the following Departments for kindly assistance during a roughish time (1) Engineer (2) Traffic (3) Permanent Way Very (4) Subordinate staff. But taking the Strategic Railway as a gigantic whole, may their breaches always need repair, and may they live on friction and deferred wires for ever more!

KHOJAC.

HOME IGNORANCE.

The Allahabad paper referring to false impressions prevailing at Home says:—

The Times again can alone afford a regular telegraphic service from India, and it is upon this that the papers all over the country have to rely. How little they really know of Indian affairs is proved when they comment upon administrative matters in this country; but when they deal with the foreign policy of the Government they go still further astray. Thus one of the leading provincial journals quite recently declared that "Burma was rather a reproach than a glory to the English name," and it justifies the assertion by general statements of the blunders that have been committed. It tells its readers that there has been no discrimination between real and imaginary dacoity; and that the policy of pacification has been to "alienate the orderly and the peaceful, and to aggravate into bitterness the patriotism we ought have done our best to conciliate." The peace which reigns over nearly the whole of Burma, the alacrity with which the people use the new railway, the rapid growth of Mandaly, the safety to life and property which has been secured in large districts which were given over to dacoity in Thebaw's time, and the part which the Burmans themselves are now taking in the work of stamping out lawlessness, furnish an ample answer to wild charges of this kind. But old stories are received to give point to the accusations. It is seriously stated that one of the most notable blunders was the disbanding at the outset of disaffected troops without disarming them, and the subsequent carrying out of a ruthless and indiscriminating disarmament of townsmen and villagers. It seems to be forgotten that General Prendergast's expedition was a river one; that only the towns on the Irrawaddy could be at first occupied, and that the Burman troops disbanded themselves, retiring into the interior, and very naturally carrying their arms away with them. The general disarmament which has since followed has been most carefully carried out, and there can be no doubt that this has mainly contributed to making the pacification of most districts a reality. We are tired of putting forward contradictions of misstatements such as we have quoted; but in justice to the military and civil officers who have done such splendid work in Upper Burma, they must be repeated to the end of the chapter. They will, perhaps, in time be accepted as against the sinister reports which have been so persistently circulated since the annexation of the country.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

At a meeting of the Sind Branch of the Uncovenanted Civil Service Association of India, held at Karachi on the 19th of July, the following resolutions were passed:—1. That the endeavour to obtain redress of our grievances be resolutely continued, and that the London Committee be supported with funds to enable that Committee to continue the agitation in Parliament and in the Press. 2. That this meeting is of opinion that there is, in equity, no difference between the claims, as to pension of non-domiciled Europeans appointed to the service by the Government in India, and those appointed by the Secretary of State; and this meeting would, therefore, deprecate any action that would seek to differentiate the two classes of officers, and introduce division into the camp. 3. That every non-domiciled European members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service in Sind be asked to subscribe a sum of ten rupees to assist the London Committee in carrying on the agitation during the Session of 1890. 4. That the European members of the Service in Beluchistan be invited to co-operate with the Sind Branch of the Association, and that they be asked to subscribe to the funds. 5. That the grateful thanks of the Sind Branch of the Association be offered to Sir Roper Lethbridge and to Mr. Henry S. King for their support and advocacy of our cause, both inside and outside the House of Commons; to the other members of the House who, on May 31, 1889, supported Sir Roper Lethbridge in his motion for a Committee of Inquiry; and to the London Committee for their unremitting labours to promote our interests. 6. That the hearty thanks of this meeting be tendered to the Press of India for the cordial support it has throughout afforded to the objects of the Association.

A WAIL FROM A DAK BUNGALOW.

And called it "curry-bhat,"
And though I thanked them with my lips,
I cursed them with my heart;
For I have fought with fossil fowl
From Indus to Pegu—
Listen, Cantonment Magistrate,
I yearn for something new.

O! murder not the youngling goat
And call it "mutton-i-chop,"
And bring me not the "cushtard tart,"
With black and dirty top.
For I have browsed on fare like this
From Cutch to Kitmandu—
Hear me, Cantonment Magistrate,
I long for something new.

Procure a staff—a supple cane,
And call the kitmadgar,
And on his aged shins explain
What proper dishes are.
For we (I speak of those Who come from Delhi or Abu)
Observe, Cantonment Magistrate, Desire all something new.

It may be in a sumptuous mess,
Or more palatial club,
Or by a wife's commanded hearth
You eat superior grub.
Thrice-lucky man, but give a thought
'Twixt soup and coffee to
The vagrant band which tramps the Land
And asks for something new.

THE BURMA RUBY MINES, LIMITED.—The Shares of this Company were last quoted yesterday ¾ to ⅞ prem.

With the cry for some sort of representative institutions for India constantly in our ears, it is worth while, says the Pioneer, examining the present constitution of the Imperial Legislative Council, while yet unenlarged in accordance with the proposals contemplated by the Government. The strength of the Council as sanctioned by statue is 12, exclusive of the Executive Council and the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal or the Punjab, as the case may be. Of these 12 members four are now officials, and eight non-officials. Of these Mr. Halliday and Syed Ameer Hossain belong to Bengal; Mr. Quinton to the North-West Provinces, and Mr. R. J. Crosthwaite to the Central Provinces. The eight non-officials are Mr. Steel, Mr. Evans, and Raja Durga Charn Laha, representing Bengal; Sir D. M. Petit, Bombay; the Maharaja of Vizianagram, Madras; Maung Ou, Burma; Mahomed Ali Khan, the North-West Provinces; and Baba Khem Singh, the Punjaub. It will thus be seen that Bengal is represented in all by five members out of twelve—a proportion which should be borne in mind by those who complain that the Province does not get its deserts. Looking at the composition of the Council from another point of view, we find the commercial community is represented by Mr. Steel, Sir D. M. Petit and Raja Durga Charn Laha; the landed interest by the Maharaja of Vizianagram, Raja Durga Charn Laha (who is a zemindar as well as a merchant), and Mahomed Ali Khan, a jaghirdar; and the legal profession by Mr. Evans. Mr. Steel, again, is the representative of European enterprise, just as Raja Durga Charn Laha and Sir D. M. Petit, a large mill-owner, represent Native mercantile interests. Taking the members by race and religion there are two Europeans, two Hindus, a Parsee, a Mahomedan, a Sikh and a Buddhist. It would be difficult, we imagine, to have a Council more truly representative in the only sense in which representation can be applied to this country.

THE imprint of books published at Cabul is characteristic. Here is that on a publication recently noticed in our columns:—"Praise and gratitude are due to God that in this auspicious moment, by the gentle and odoriferous spring breezes and the Pearl of the Ocean of Grandeur and Good Fortune, namely, Amir-ibn-el-Amir, Ibn-el-Amir, Amir Abdur Rahman Khan, Bahadur (may his prosperity and kingdom be permanent): this book, which is unanswerable, designated Ihtesab-ud-Din, has been approved for the guidance of the Mohtasibs of the God-granted Kingdom of Afghanistan; and it was printed by Abdur Rezzak Beg of Delhi, at the Cabul Printing Press, on the 7th of Shawal 1366 A.H."

THE Bombay Gazette says:—A representative meeting of the members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service was lately held at Poona, when the accounts of the Association for the past year were approved and a motion was carried unanimously congratulating the Home Committee on the gratifying results obtained through the motion of Sir Roper Lethbridge in the House of Commons. While thanking the Home Committee for their untiring efforts during the past year, the meeting urged the continuance of the movement and promised a hearty and sustained support. In order the more effectually to carry out the collection of funds it was decided that one member of each department of the Service should communicate with each and every member of his department, in the hope that a sum would thus be collected which would be thoroughly representative of the numerical strength of the Service. The plan adopted during the last few years was that one officer in each station should collect funds from the residents of his station, but that arrangement did not work very successfully. The scheme now adopted appears much more workable, and subscriptions are already flowing in fast. If every member of the Uncovenanted Services in this Presidency subscribes ten rupees only, a handsome sum will be collected, and a very substantial help given to the Home Committee. We have already expressed our sympathy with the objects of the Association. If the same degree of energy which has now manifested itself is consistently maintained, the aspirations of the Indian Services, as they are now officially denominated, will soon be brought within the range of practical politics.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes:—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole prorietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880. To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO. Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Scme from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, 1889.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 13th Aug.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 11th Aug.; and from Calcutta to the 11th Aug.

IT is now almost certain that the Marquis of Lansdowne will hold his first grand Durbar at Lahore early in November. His Excellency will probably stay at the capital of the Punjab for eight or ten days.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR will probably visit Mandalay and Bhamo during his Indian tour.

THE military officers employed in reorganising the armies of the Native States are to be styled inspection officers simply, their position in relation to the Chiefs and Durbars being thus clearly defined. They will be appointed on probation in the same way as officers of the Political Service.

FORTY Native regiments have received the Martini-Henry Rifle, but further arming with the weapon will be stopped until the British Regiments can be armed with the new magazine rifle.

THE exploration of the Gomal Pass this cold weather will probably be carried out both from the side of the Zhob Valley and from the frontier west of the Indus.

THE Birur-Gubbi Section of the Southern Mahratta Railway, which connects the Mysore State Railway with the general system, was opened on Monday, the 5th inst., by the Maharajah of Mysore.

BY this line the distance between Bombay and Bangalore is reduced by 180 miles.

THE Government of India has recommended to the India Office that the minimum and maximum age for candidates for the Indian Forest Service should be fixed at 18 and 21 years respectively.

RAIN and floods have done considerable damage in the Champaran district, where it is estimated that a loss on indigo of no fewer than nine lakhs of rupees will be suffered.

IT is believed that the English Official Secret Act applies primarily in India as well as in England, but it is intended to re-enact it to prevent any possible misconception.

GENERAL CHESNEY was to present the preliminary report on the Cantonment Bill at the meeting of the Legislative Council on 14th Aug. The question of house property in cantonments will be left to be dealt with in Calcutta.

THE Government of India have addressed a despatch to the Secretary of State for India, recommending the abolition of the rule under which Public Works Department officers have to retire at the age of 55.

THE machinery of jail administration in India will shortly undergo an important alteration. The Jail Department will be made Imperial, with an Inspector-General for the whole of India, and a Deputy Inspector-General for each province, and the officers of the Department will be liable to transference from one province to another. Dr. Lethbridge will be the first Inspector-General.

HONORARY MAJOR WM. CREIGHTON, Paymaster 7th (Q.O.) Hussars, is being tried by Court-Martial at Hyderabad for fraudulently misapplying public money.

CAPTAIN DURAND has been appointed Political Agent in Gilgit.

GOVERNMENT has directed that a consignment of 700 tons of Padouk timber from the Andamans be sent for sale in the London market.

GENERAL SIR G. WHITE has proceeded to England on sixty days' privilege leave. The command at Quetta devolves upon Colonel Galloway in his absence.

MR. LUMSDEN, Commissioner of Benares, who has just rejoined the division after acting for a few weeks on the Board of Revenue, intends taking two months' privilege leave from the middle of September. This will carry him up to the date when Mr. C. A. Daniell, Senior Member of the Board, vacates his seat, so that it is improbable Mr. Lumsden will return to Benares again.

COLONEL HENDERSON, General Superintendent of Thaggi, started from Simla on the 8th August for his usual monsoon tour in Rajputana and Central India.

MR. RIBBENTROP was to make over charge of the Forest Department on the 14th August to Mr. Hill, who is now at Simla.

MAJOR GRANT, R.E., will join the Military Department as Assistant Secretary consequent upon Major Broadbent officiating for Colonel Toker as Deputy Secretary.

THE absence of news regarding the Badakshan rebellion is believed to be due to the rising having been quickly suppressed by the Afghan troops. The Amir's future movements are still unknown, as he shows no disposition to leave Mazar.

ONE of those rumours which periodically come into circulation in connection with Central Asian affairs was current in Simla a day or two ago, the Government being credited with an intention to put 10,000 men into Kandahar in the autumn. The story is absolutely without foundation.

A REPORT appears in a Karachi paper that Ayub Khan has escaped. The news is untrue, as the Government have received no intimation of any such fact from Kashmir, the last report being that the Sirdar was about to return to India.

LATEST rumours from Kashmir speak of a quarrel between the Maharaja and his brother Raja Ram Singh, the seconded President of the Council. Such an event would mean a direct split in the forces of the opposition to the present administration, so that this family difference would not be a matter to be wholly deplored.

THERE is nothing new in the last proposal of the Amban as submitted by Mr. Hart. The claim of Chinese suzerainty over Sikkim is still persevered in, with the ingenious suggestion that it might be recognised as merely nominal. There is no likelihood of this being admitted, and the negotiations will probably be closed forthwith, as their continuance is useless. The future policy of the Government of India will be simply the exclusion of Tibetan influence from Sikkim.

THE Lushai Chief Lingpunga is expected to carry out his threatened raid early in September into the Chengri Valley. The people of the neighbourhood have taken alarm, and therefore to reassure them a police post has been established at Foormoorung, as was done last year.

IT is said that the Begum is constructing a new Jumma Musjid in Bhopal at a cost of fifteen lakhs of rupees.

THE latest news from Fao is that the work on the fortifications commenced there have again been discontinued.

postponed sine die on the application of the complainant, who has been requested to select his own time for the investigation.

GOVERNMENT have directed a lenient interpretation to be given to the working of the Merchandise Marks Act until sufficient time has elapsed for the new rules to be properly understood.

STRONG objections are felt to changing the day for the departure of the English mail from Bombay to Sunday.

NOTES.

THERE is little news of interest from India by the present Overland Mail. The strikes, unlike ours in London, appear to have been of short duration. Gharry-wallahs, hackery men, and mehtars have returned to work. A strike of the last-named honourable class is a thing to be dreaded in India with a dread which only Anglo-Indians can understand.

THE agitation amongst the Parsees at Bombay concerning Mr. Ommanney's Note continues. A requisition has been signed requesting the Trustees of the Parsee Punchayet Funds to call a public meeting of Parsees "to express the indignation felt by the community at the aspersions cast upon it," and a counter-requisition has been got up declaring that "looking to all the surrounding circumstances, it is not advisable to call a public meeting and thereby needlessly irritate the susceptibilities of the Parsee community." Both requisitions have been numerously signed; but this signifies little, for signatures to requisitions can always be obtained in India. They are as easily obtainable as signatures to a memorial to the Home Secretary here.

BOMBAY is, however, also agitated about another matter. The proposal (from this side) to change the Bombay mail day to Sunday is, we are told, being "very properly resented." The Hon. Mr. Forbes Adam, Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, has sent in a strong protest on behalf of the commercial community. The Times of India trusts that the Government will support this protest by every means in their power, and issue an assurance to that effect. Failing this it looks to the leaders of the commercial community to call together a public meeting at which all classes can be represented.

BY-THE-WAY, as the present proprietors of the Times of India are publishing under the heading of "Friendly Greetings from Home," notices of the English Press regarding themselves, we may add our good wishes for the continued success of the Bombay paper under the direction of Mr. Curwen, its editor, and Mr. Kane, its manager. These gentlemen did good and loyal service to the former proprietor, the late General Nassau Lees, for no less a period than ten years, and we think that he might have left them by will something more tangible than the expression of his high opinion concerning them. However, they have now purchased the paper, and under their joint control we hope that the Times of India will be as prosperous and popular in the future as it has been under them in the past.

H.E. THE VICEROY, having expressed a wish that Lord Connemara should pay him a visit at Simla, that Governor, it is expected, will leave Ootacamund on the 3rd prox., and after a short tour will probably leave Madras in the P. and O. Co.'s s.s. Khedive on the 20th, proceeding to Simla viâ Calcutta and Allahabad. After spending about ten days at Simla, Lord Connemara will return to Madras early in November to arrange for the reception of H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor, due in Madras about the third week in November.

THE Pioneer asks:—"What will Rangoon journalists manage to do when Sir Charles Crosthwaite leaves them to take his holiday? There is something almost humorous in the cool persistency with which the correspondent of the Times makes the Chief Commissioner his sport. Just as Swift proved that Partridge was dead, whatever the poor almanac-maker might maintain to the contrary, so does our correspondent lay the Chief Commissioner on the bed of sickness one week and revive him the next, both illness and recovery being developed out of his own consciousness. On another occasion he sentences his victim to early retirement, and has thoughts about nominating a successor. He even denies him the ordinary rights of the Covenanted Civil Service, for a few weeks ago the English public were acquainted by the Times with the interesting fact that Sir Charles Crosthwaite would be retiring at an early date 'under the fifty-five years' rule.' The last of these announcements comes to hand in the Rangoon Gazette just received, to the effect that the Chief Commissioner will not be seen again in Burma, his three months' leave being merely a mode of passage to the Viceroy's Council. It will be odd, but we shall see this veracious information reproduced three weeks hence in the Times' telegrams."

A COMMITTEE of railway experts will meet at Cawnpore in November to consider what steps should be taken to secure uniformity of pattern in rolling-stock on Indian railways. All the great lines will be represented, and the question is to be gone into in the most thorough way. At present nearly every line has a particular pattern for the fittings of its carriages, doors, windows, lamps, and so forth, and the result is that the duplicate parts of these have to be made to meet the special requirements of each railway. If fixed patterns were in use there would be a great saving of expense, especially where indents have to be sent to England. Uniformity of design in the rolling-stock itself cannot be secured for a long time to come, as the thousands of carriages and waggons now on the rails must continue to run until worn out; but the new stock can at least be built on a universal pattern, due allowance being made for difference of gauge on the several lines.

IN opposing the demand, now no longer to be denied, for a Court of Criminal Appeal, Lord Bramwell, Mr. Poland and the rest seem determined to illustrate the insular prejudices and restricted views of the stay-at-home English lawyer. Let jurists whose minds are open to conviction on the subject look into the long settled procedure in this respect under the Indian codes. In India the system of criminal appeal is in regular working order—including the spontaneous action of the High Courts in sending for reports of cases where it may appear to their Registrars that there has been any failure of justice. Though this function of revision of the decisions of magistrates and sessions courts includes power to enhance sentences this course is only taken when the obvious requirements of the codes have not been met. In India the legal system—whatever we may sometimes think as to its administration—is in many respects half a century in advance of the traditional and unscientific forms under which our English judges and counsel have to struggle. There are several retired Indian High Court judges, including Sir Richard Couch, Sir Charles Turner, Sir Richard Garth and many eminent counsel, one or other of whom might do well, at this juncture, to set forth in some detail the working of the Indian system of criminal appeal. If this were well done the question would be settled once for all, in spite of those traditional prejudices that rest with leaden weight on the ordinary "legal mind"—whatever that may be.

THE prospects of the Simla Fine Art Exhibition are so far exceedingly good, the number of contributors is equal to the average, and some paintings have been promised, which have appeared at the Academy. The date of opening is not quite fixed, but it will be about the 29th instant.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, AUG. 25.

The identification of Tantia Bheel, the famous freebooter chief of the Central Provinces, recently captured in Holkar's territory, seems to be complete. He has been formally identified before the first assistant to the Resident by male and female witnesses, the noses of whom he had cut off in gentle and sportive dalliance, also by his barber. Tantia admits having escaped from Khandwa Gaol 13 years ago, and having committed numerous robberies since. He is a tall, wiry man, aged about 50. He is now lodged in the Presidency Gaol to await trial.

A resolution on gaol administration reports that for the year 1888 of a total number of 155,623 convicts 133,977 were sentenced to less than one year's imprisonment. There was a decrease in the number of sentences of transportation, but death sentences increased from 425 to 593. Corporal punishments in gaol showed a satisfactory decrease from 2,430 to 1,891. The gross expenditure rose from Rs.45,84,000, to Rs.49,24,000, but the cost per head was Rs.2·8 less. The amount of earnings by convicts is less than in any of the four years preceding. The regulations in connection with this question are not considered satisfactory, and, it is said, require further consideration by local Governments. The health returns are not so good as in 1887, the number of admissions to hospital having risen from 67,000 to over 79,000.

The Sikkim garrison is being rapidly reduced. The Pioneers are already withdrawn, and the 3rd and 24th Goorkhas leave at the beginning of September. It is determined to maintain a military occupation, but with a very small force, until such time as the Tibetans make a fresh invasion.

The joint operations from the Chittagong border and the Chin hills will be conducted on a scale sufficient to overawe the various wild tribes holding the ranges of hills between Manipur and Arracan. It is anticipated that the two forces will join hands in about one month from the date of starting. Fort White is distant from the furthermost Chittagong outpost about 150 miles, but the intervening country is mountainous and densely wooded, and no roads. The principal object of the joint expedition is to construct a military road fitted for the movements of troops from Eastern Bengal into Upper Burma. The force from Burma will comprise two columns containing five infantry regiments and one mountain battery.

The mobilisation scheme is being developed. The territorial generals and the principal staff authorities will send in detailed reports discussing and criticising the scheme. It is estimated that the proposed reform of the Bengal cavalry will cost Rs.80,000 annually.

The latest reports, which are believed to be authentic, appear to confirm the statement that the Badakshan rebellion has utterly collapsed. The Ameer occupies the province with six infantry and two cavalry regiments, and one battery. The Mirs have fled, and the Ameer's authority is thoroughly reinstated.

The Governor of Candahar paid a flying visit of inspection to the British post of Chaman. He only stayed one night.

Reports from Bajour state that Umra Khan has completely surrounded the fort at Barghola Malak. The other chiefs of Swat are marching to relieve the besieged, and a battle is believed to be imminent.

The Viceroy will make an extensive tour along the North-West Frontier in the autumn, including the Khyber Pass, Kohat, Bannu, and Dera Ismail Khan, whence he will ride to the mouth of the Gomla Pass. He will subsequently visit Quetta and Pishin.

The Government have published a despatch to the Secretary of State on the Assam question. The Viceroy considers most of the alleged cases of kidnapping are proved to be either unfounded or exaggerated. Those substantiated could have been prevented or punished under the existing law. A review of the emigration laws is in contemplation; but special legislation is unnecessary.

The latest telegram from Ganjam reports that 78,000 persons are receiving gratuitous relief, showing a decrease of 15,000; 14,000 are employed on relief works; and the deaths from cholera have been 347. The prospects of the next harvest are favourable. In the event of failure of stocks, the Government will adopt immediate measures to import food-grains. The official report is published on the scarcity in the Patna and Orissa divisions. The Rajah of Puspulla is severely censured for his neglect. One hundred and forty-eight deaths from starvation are reported, and 10 per cent. of the population in Angul are suffering from acute distress. Improved communications are greatly needed.

In the recent resolution on the annual administration of the Patna division the Maharajahs of Dhurbunga, Hutwa, and Bettia are commended for their liberal assistance during the recent distress.

The Thakur of Bhownagur has given Rs.2,00,000 towards the Bombay Hospital for training nurses.

All classes, headed by the Bishop of Bombay, enter a protest against the proposal to despatch the Indian mail on Sunday.

The native Judge of the Madras High Court has delivered his judgment, supporting the magistrates' order in the case of the chief priest of the Tripati Temple. He states that the religious objections are groundless.

The President of the Madras Municipality has filed a suit against a prominent member of the municipality for defamation, and has laid the damages at Rs.50,000. At the last criminal session at Calcutta the editor of the Pioneer, an influential journal published at Allahabad, was prosecuted for defamation. Mr. Justice Norris directed a verdict of acquittal on the ground that publication in Calcutta by the editor was not proved.

The Maharajah of Benares is making extensive preparations for tiger-shooting for the benefit of Prince Albert Victor, and arrangements are also being made for bear and leopard shooting.

The Madras Mail, in commenting on the abuses of the Government migration to the hills, points out that in a despatch the Secretary of State in 1870 directed that absence from Madras should be strictly limited to three months, and, moreover, that this migration should involve no extra expense beyond that incurred in the Governor's tours. These directions, however, have been steadily disregarded. In 1885, sojourn on the hills extended to six months, whilst the admitted extra expense was Rs.45,663. In 1883, the time of absence was seven months; in 1884, six months, 23 days; in 1885, six months and a-half; in 1886, five months and a-half; in 1887-8, six months and a-half; and in 1889, five months. Lord Connemara was the first to shorten his stay. The writer dwells on the evil consequences which result from these prolonged withdrawals of the Executive and army headquarters from the immediate influence of public opinion and from the legitimate scene of Government operations.

The recent despatch of the Secretary of State with reference to the corrupt Bombay officials will probably result in the Government of India passing an Indemnity Act. This does not seem to hold out much hope of a satisfactory conclusion; but it is possible that the Indian Government may be sufficiently skilful to hit upon some via media which may solve in an honourable manner this very unsavoury question. Several of the native survey officials recently convicted of levying blackmail on certain villages have appealed to the Bombay High Court.

BURMA.

RANGOON, AUG. 25.

A band of 60 dacoits, led by Thikayaza, has attacked and burned the police guard and forest station at Yindaw, near the old frontier, and a small column of mounted Infantry and Sepoys has been sent in pursuit.

The Magwe district continues disturbed in Upper Chindwin. While the larger dacoit bands have been broken up, the district continues greatly troubled by small bands. Many of these bands consist of followers of the so-called Shwaygyobin Prince, who is still with the Chins. The Gangaw Valley, the scene of the insurrection at the beginning of the year, is also much infested by dacoits. The dacoit bands recently troubling Woontho have retreated to the Pyoungshoo forests, in the Yau district.

Sir C. Crosthwaite has returned to Rangoon from a lengthened tour in Upper Burma. He leaves for India immediately on the arrival of Mr. A. P. Macdonnell, C.S.I., his locum tenens. The new Chief Commissioner has a task of no ordinary difficulty before him in Upper Burma. While much progress is being made towards crushing dacoity by the dispersal of large bands, several districts continue to be seriously disturbed, and the country is still generally unsettled. Many difficult questions remain to be dealt with. The submission of the Woontho Tsawbwa has so far been nominal, and fuller submission must be secured. Military operations against the Chins have to be continued and extended. Another expedition to Eastern Karenni may be necessary, and serious financial difficulties have to be met.

A feature in Sir Charles Crosthwaite's administration, relied on by his friends and supporters as proving the successful results of his administration, is the large increase in the revenue ot Upper Burma since the annexation. Roughly speaking, the revenue has risen from 20 lakhs in 1886 to 70 lakhs in the present year. This noteable increase of revenue is largely due to the able supervision of Mr. Fryer, the Financial Commissioner. The expenditure has, however, more than kept pace with the increased revenue. At present the total revenue raised in Upper Burma is insufficient to meet the single item of the cost of military and civil police maintained in that province, even when punitive police taxes are added. Moreover, calculating increase of revenue since 1886 is somewhat misleading. In that year, owing to the state of open war prevailing throughout Upper Burma the revenue could not be collected in the greater part of the province. This increase in revenue has mainly been in land revenue and house-tax. These taxes, which have considerably more than doubled since 1886, include the rent of State land and miscellaneous land revenue. Excise and stamps, taxes unknown under Burmese rule, have to some extent replaced the import duties abolished on annexation. Tributes from the Shan States and elsewhere have also added to receipts. The increase in the land revenue is not due to any large increase in cultivation in Upper Burma, but to the following causes. The land and house taxes are now much more rigidly levied than under Burmese rule. Local governments have also by recent regulations declared large and valuable portions of land, including islands in rivers, to be Government land until the contrary is proved. Possession has been resumed, or rent demanded, of lands granted to Amoodans, or old soldiers, in lieu of pensions. What has, however, contributed most to the increase in the land revenue and house-tax is that under British rule the terrible amount of peculation by revenue officials which prevailed under Theebaw and his predecessors has been greatly checked, if not completely put an end to. The amount thus diverted from public revenue before annexation was certainly not less than one-third of the total amount of taxes levied, and probably greatly exceeded that sum.

BOMBAY, AUG. 25.

The following is the programme arranged for Prince Albert Victor's visit to India. His Royal Highness will proceed from here to Hyderabad, Mysore, Bangalore, Madras, and Calcutta, where he will arrive in Christmas week. He will then continue his journey to Benares, Cawnpore, Rawul Pindi, Peshawur, and Baroda, and will embark here on his homeward journey in March next.

His Royal Highness will not visit Burma.

GANJAM.

The following telegram has been received at the India Office:—

"From Governor, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1889.

"Condition of Ganjam for week ended Aug. 24th. Season continues very favourable. Prices stationary. Rainfall general; average for 19 stations 1·17 inches during week. Numbers on large works, 7,853; on small works, 2,734. Numbers on gratuitous relief during week ended Aug. 17th, 63,355, of whom 9,003 men, 15,400 women, and 40,952 children. Further decrease of 12,562 this week due to closer scrutiny of recipients. Seventy-seven relief circles constituted, and 63 kitchens established. Imports by sea, 151 tons; by land, 434 tons. Deaths from cholera, 179."

REORGANISING THE PUNJAB INFANTRY.

(Pioneer.)

The work of reorganising the infantry of the Punjab States which are to share in the defence of the North-West Frontier was actively carried on during the first four or five months of the current year. It was found out that the system of drill which obtained most favour in the various States was very antiquated, the one great aim of the officers being to teach their men to march past, which they were able to do with fair precision. But smartness on parade, soldierly appearance and confidence in their arms were all wanting. The first thing, therefore, to be done was to borrow drill instructors from the regular regiments of the Native army and to post them to each State. Three of these were sent to Patiala, two to Jhind, Nabha and Kapurthala, and one to Bahawulpore, Faridkote and Maler Kotla respectively. The officers and non-commissioned officers were taught in accordance with the new drill book of 1889, and they gradually learned enough to drill their own men, who were meanwhile also passing through the instructors' hands. The instruction was given just as if the soldiers had only been enlisted a few weeks and were still practically recruits. This plan was found to answer very well, the men taking an interest in their drill and showing anxiety to learn it quickly. The total strength of the infantry in the States, excluding Kashmir, is now over 3,500, Patiala contributing 1,000, and Jhind, Nabha and Kapurthala 600 each. The working uniform which has been adopted is khaki, and the accoutrements when obsolete are being replaced by those of the Mackenzie pattern. The issue of Snider rifles to each regiment so soon as it is reported to be in a state fit to justify the men being instructed in the use of the breech-loader was sanctioned some time ago, and in the ensuing cold weather musketry instruction will be generally carried out. As the greatest attention has been paid to physique in selecting the Sepoys for the picked regiments, there is now a body of troops in the Punjab which, in another year, will be well advanced towards that efficiency which would justify their employment on service.

RECRUITING OF THE BENCH IN INDIA.

(Madras Mail.)

The existing system of recruiting the bench is admitted on all sides to be objectionable; and the opinion is widely entertained that it should be reformed by putting a stop once for all to interchanges between the revenue and judicial branches of the Civil Service. The revenue branch may be left as it is; but linked with it, as part of the Civil Service of the country, but in no other respect should be a judicial system officered by none other than men trained from youth to law. The home bar is crowded, and the prizes within its reach are few and far between. Many a young barrister may feel that it is in him to do justice to the Solicitor-Generalship or Attorney-Generalship, but by the age of thirty he usually realises that he has no chance of promotion of that sort, and that his prospects of earning enough to live upon are none of the best. If a certain percentage of the appointments in the judicial branch of the Civil Service of India were reserved for barristers from England (including English barristers practising in India), and the remainder for natives of exceptional merit in India, there should be no lack of promising candidates for the handsome certainty "with pension to follow" that the Government might offer. The English candidates should not be under thirty years of age, and they should satisfy tests as to legal attainments and experience that the Government could prescribe; they should be required to put in a probation, acting under the orders of collectors, in revenue matters; and, having acquired some knowledge of how the land is governed, and some acquaintance with local habits and customs, they might then be made Acting, and eventually pucka District Judges. Their period of service might be fixed at fifteen years, at the end of which they might be entitled to pension; and they would be free then either to join the local bar, or to resume the practice of their profession in England. To increase the attractions to home barristers of a judicial career in India, two of the Judgeships of the High Court should be reserved for Barrister-District Judges. The Chief Justice and one Puisne Judge should always be home barristers, appointed direct from England to the bench in India. Another Puisne Judgeship might be reserved, as a rule, for one Barrister from the High Court bar, and a third should be given to a native judicial officer or advocate.

Thus, the District Board would be officered chiefly by men who are professional lawyers, possessed of English experience of law and practice, on which they would soon graft Indian experience. The tendency on their part to look at every question through no other spectacles than those of the English lawyer might at first cause inconvenience, but the bar would soon show that the amiable weakness could not be indulged with impunity. It has been well said that "the form of the law of England, and many, though not all, of its principles, are the growth of English habits, English morals, English prejudices, and even English climate," and it is sometimes forgotten that there is an indigenous plant which may be advantageously pruned and trained, but should not be uprooted. The Barrister-District Judge would be in sympathy with modern law, and would be more or less influenced by the traditions of the noble profession to which he belongs. He may propose when he arrives to make of India a stepping-stone to higher things, and the monotony of Mofussil life may tempt him to fret over the foolish idea that had he remained at home the Chancellorship, or at least the Rolls, would have been within his reach. But he will probably shake down to the country like his neighbours have done, and make the best of it; and when he has qualified for pension he will thank his stars that he was prudent enough in comparative youth to put a curb on his vaulting ambition. The bar would recognise in him a man who is no amateur lawyer, but to a great extent an expert, who has gained his forensic experience in a better arena than India affords; and he would see in the bar men of talent and local knowledge who are entitled to his respect.

BENGAL.

THE Bengal Government has been awarded a medal and diploma by the authorities of the Adelaide Exhibition of 1887 desire, by merging the different nationalities into one homogeneous whole, to govern the country upon a representative system. They imagine this to be a possible task, but the teachings of history are opposed to it. The present history of Crete contains enough to substantiate our statement. In India there are men of many races and religions, and we wonder, therefore, how would it be possible to reconcile so many conflicting interests, and thus pave the way for the introduction of that reform which the Congressmen are so eager to bring about. If India ever comes to be peopled by one race professing one religion, then may this dream have realisation."

THE Bangobashi writes:—"The Babu liberators of India

THE Statesman reports:—"The other day his Excellency the Viceroy received a splendid specimen of a full-grown lioness. It was a present sent to the Viceroy from the Sultan of Zanzibar, and was landed by the s.s. Swordsman, after which it was sent to the Zoological Gardens, Calcutta. During a course of conversation over the hubble-bubble the keepers had an argument as to the fighting abilities of tigers and lions. The tiger's keeper jumped on to the lioness' cage and took up her door, when the tiger with a bound leaped on the top of the sleeping lioness and caught her by the throat, holding on for about ten minutes, when the fine old brute died without a struggle. The tiger's keeper has since run away and cannot be found; while the keeper of the lioness has sworn that wherever he catches his brother-keeper he will do for him as the tiger did for the lioness. Lord Lansdown has, we hear, been informed by wire of this sad occurrence."

THE Fort Lungleh correspondent of the Englishman reports:—"Some of the captives taken in the raid on the Chengri Valley, at the very end of December last, have been ransomed, and others have escaped. Their stories are piteous; they tell of children butchered before their mother's eyes. Seven poor captives who could not keep up for the long eight days' march to their captors' village were ruthlessly cut down. When the raiders approached the Klong or Dullesary river, they fired off guns, and all the people came down to the bank and welcomed them with shouts and beer. As they approached the village a young Tipperah was "very cruelly slaughtered" by the Chief's son, who had been unable to go on the raid and showed his bravery by thus killing in cold blood this poor defenceless wretch. One woman says, "As we entered the village a little girl was speared and fell down writhing on the ground and crying in agony, 'Oh! mother, mother," and when her mother and sister ran towards her they were thrust away roughly into their captors' houses." Remember that all these outrages were committed on people who had in no way offended the raiders; that the raiders are people who were spared by the expedition of 1871-72, and who profess to be our friends."

MADRAS.

HERE is a crumb for Messrs. Caine and Co. The right of selling toddy, and spirits distilled from toddy, during the ensuing Malayalam year in the Taluq of Trichur, was put up to auction on the 29th ultimo, and knocked down to the tune of Rs. 30,050! This in a purely Native State.

A VERY sad accident occurred at this Wynaad Mine on Monday evening, 29th July, about 6 P.M., resulting in the death of four men and two being wounded. Our Ootacamund contemporary learns that the afternoon shift were at work in the winze in the 48 level, and four men were drilling the rock and had got a hole driller about two feet deep, when a tremendous explosion took place. Mr. Johnston, the general manager, happened to be in the mine at the time, and he, with Mr. Thomas Peters the European miner at work, ran to the spot to render any assistance in their power. A dreadful sight awaited them on their descending the winze, which was fifty feet deep, three men were found dead and the other poor fellow was so injured that he died before he could be removed. Two of the dead were shockingly mangled, and strong nerves were required for the sad work. The injured men were fifty feet above, and were, strange to say, struck by pieces of stones, but they are not very seriously injured and are likely to be well again in a few days. Arrangements were immediately made for the removal of the wounded, and then the dead were sent to the surface. From the accounts of the wounded, it would appear that either a hole had missed fire during the day, or that only a portion of the dynamite had exploded, and that the unfortunate men had come in contact with this dynamite and they had thus met their deaths.—Mail.

ON the recommendation of a Medical Board, Surgeon-Major J. Arnott has been permitted to proceed to England on leave, in anticipation of the leave which will hereafter be granted him by Government.

THE October Vacation of the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction will commence on Monday, Oct. 21, and end on Saturday, Nov. 23, but the Criminal Sessions will commence on Wednesday, Nov. 20.

MR. C. B. WINCHESTER, C.S., is appointed to act as Collector and Magistrate of the district of Surat, District Registrar and Agent for the Governor, Surat, pending further orders, vice Mr. J. A. Baines, C.S., on deputation under the Government of India.

THE argument of the rule nisi, obtained by Mr. Burder on behalf of the plaintiffs, Messrs. Lawrence and Mayo (to show cause why the judgment of the Fourth Judge of the Small Cause Court should not be set aside on the ground that he was wrong in deciding that the Agra Bank were not liable for the loss occasioned by their negligence in failing to telegraph a remittance to England, although they had undertaken to do so, and had debited the plaintiffs' account with the amount at the current rate of the day) came on before the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court on Tuesday, when Mr. Smith, on behalf of the Agra Bank, asked for a postponement of five weeks to enable the Bank to communicate with Mr. Hutton, the late manager of the Bank, who was at present in England, with a view to a settlement. Mr. Burder opposed the application, as the question of the argument of the rule could not be in any way affected by anything Mr. Hutton might say, and suggested that the rule should be made absolute, and he would then consent to a postponement of the suit to enable the Bank to settle, as no doubt they would, as it was hardly likely a Bank would dispute such a claim. The Court granted the postponement for five weeks, to enable a settlement to be arrived at.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE man who thrashed Mr. A. Robinson, Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad, with a shoe, on being sentenced to seven years' hard labour, has been committed to take his trial for assault on a public servant.

LIKE the rivers of North-Western India, the Oxus has been in high flood lately. It is stated that near Charjui and Kilaf it is three miles broad. The Russian bridge at Charjui was somewhat damaged, but has been effectively repaired.

THE name of Mr. H. A. S. Fenner, Superintending Engineer, Punjab, has been sent up to the Government of India for the appointment of Public Works Department, Secretary to Government, in Rajputana.

THE work on the Delhi-Kalka Railway is in rapid progress, more especially near Umballa, and it is hoped, ere long, that the minor bridges will be completed. The Tanpi, Umla, and Markanda bridges are no small difficulties to be overcome, for though there is no rain just now, at times heavy floods come down, owing to heavy rain in the hills, and retard work on them.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Aug. 27.

—o—

THE RUMOURED ANNEXATION OF CASHMERE.

Lord Herschell: I wish to ask the Secretary of State for India whether there is any foundation for the rumours, which seem to have occasioned some alarm in different parts of India, that it is the intention of the Government to take possession of the State of Cashmere.

Viscount Cross: I can find no foundation for that report. It is true that we were bound, with the concurrence of the Viceroy, to accept the resignation of the ruler of Cashmere, and place the State under a native council, but any one who has looked into the way in which the State of Cashmere has been governed for some time past can have no doubt whatever that a wise step has been taken. There is not the slightest intention on the part of the Government or of the Viceroy to annex Cashmere to the British Crown. We have every hope that when the state of things has been remedied in Cashmere the late ruler will see it to be advisable to reassume control of his State and to govern in a way which will be a benefit to his subjects and to the adjacent native countries.

COUNCIL OF INDIA BILL.

Viscount Cross, in moving the second reading of this Bill, explained that by the original Act governing India the Council of India was to consist of fifteen members, and when a vacancy occurred the Secretary of State was bound to fill it up. About a year ago he appointed a Committee to consider carefully the charges of India, about which a good deal of debate had been raised. One of the recommendations of the Council was that their own number should be reduced. Acting on the recommendation of the Council, therefore, he asked their lordships to assent to the second reading of the Bill. A vacancy on the Council had unfortunately occurred through the ill-health of Sir Henry Yule, whose presence on the Council had been of enormous advantage to the natives of the country. A man of more kindly disposition, thorough intelligence, high-minded, upright, honourable character he believed did not exist; and he should like to bear testimony to the estimation in which his work was held, and to the services which he had rendered in the office he had so long filled.

The Bill was read a second time.

Aug. 28.

The Council of India Bill was read a third time, and passed.

THE MAMLUTDARS.

Lord Herschell asked whether the Government had arrived at a determination with reference to the mode in which the native officials are to be dealt with who came forward as witnesses before the Commission of Inquiry into the conduct of Mr. Crawford. The Bombay Government, believing that the continuing of Mr. Crawford in his position was calculated to lead to widespread corruption, were under every possible obligation to deal with the matter with a view to his removal if the circumstances were proved. They found it would be impossible to obtain evidence unless an assurance was given to native officials who served under him that if they came forward and told the truth they should not suffer for it. No doubt it was a serious thing to give such a pledge; but the difficulty was serious, and the pledge was given. The inquiry took place, and although the Commissioners reported that the allegations of bribery and personal corruption against Mr. Crawford were not proved, yet he had enabled other officials to lead people to believe that the threats and solicitations of those officers were really from himself. Mr. Crawford was dismissed from the service, which was no doubt a serious penalty, but was not in excess of what he merited. The Government having given a pledge to the native witnesses were bound to adhere to that pledge, solemnly given, and more harm would be done by breaking the pledge than would be done by maintaining men in their positions, although he could not say they were free from blame.

Viscount Cross said this matter had been one of considerable difficulty. He thought the Bombay Government ill advised in giving these native officials a guarantee not only against prosecution but of continuance in office. That guarantee seemed to him to be illegal, and to be an indemnity which, in the case of really corrupt officials, could not be carried out. It was quite impossible to give effect to the indemnity in regard to the corrupt class who volunteered payment of bribes to secure their own objects or to escape the results of previous misconduct, or who, under slender temptation, had money to purchase favours to which they had no substantial claim. Those, he had no doubt, would be dismissed from their offices with such money compensation as the Government of India might think advisable; but the rest, who had, under extreme pressure, in order to avoid ruin, paid money, would be allowed to remain in their places. He wished to bear testimony to the high moral value of the work of the Commission.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Aug. 26.

INDIAN LEAVE ALLOWANCES.

Sir R. Lethbridge asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was true, as stated in a recent telegram from London to India, that an Uncovenanted Civil servant in the Public Works Department, Madras, had won his test case against the Government, and had obtained the concession that his leave allowances were to be paid in sterling.

Sir J. Gorst said that nobody had either tried or won a case against the Government.

HEALTH OF INDIAN TROOPS.

Mr. H. J. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for War what was the ratio of admissions for venereal disease among British troops in India, and also among Native troops, during the first four months of 1888.

Mr. E. Stanhope: Among British troops 349 per 1,000. I have no information as to Native troops.

In answer to Mr. H. J. Wilson,

Sir J. Gorst said that no report was made up with regard to Native troops.

MR. MOOKERJI AND NATIVE INDIAN SILKS.

Sir R. Lethbridge asked the Under-Secretary for India whether his attention had been called to the case of Mr. Mookerji, a Native gentleman, who, after having, at the expense of the Indian Government, received special training on the subject, and been placed at the head of an establishment in India intended to promote the cultivation and preparation of Native silks there, was now employed by private English and Indian merchants, the support and control of the central and provincial Governments having been withdrawn; and whether he would lay the correspondence on the subject on the table.

Sir J. Gorst: No information has been received as to what arrangement has been concluded by Mr. Mookerji with the Government of India since his return to that country. But the Secretary of State has drawn the attention of the Government of India to the suggestion made by the secretary of the silk association that experiments with a view to the development of the Bengal industry should be conducted under Government supervision. Papers can be laid on the table of the House if the hon. member wishes it.

SUNDAY POSTAL LABOUR IN INDIA.

Sir R. Lethbridge asked whether the attention of the Secretary of State for India had been drawn to the statement that the India Government proposed to make Sunday a day of despatch for the mails from Bombay, and whether the Government would veto a proposal which would outrage the religious feelings of a large portion of the community.

Sir J. Gorst: I am not able to say whether the attention of the Secretary of State has been called to this question or not. The question of the day of despatch of the Indian mail is under the consideration of the Government of India in India, and no proposal has yet been made to the Secretary of State.

Aug. 27.

THE DECCAN MINES.

In answer to Sir G. Campbell,

Sir J. Gorst said: The concession of mining rights to the Deccan Company has never ceased to be in force. The Secretary of State has offered, in the event of certain conditions being agreed to by the concessionaires, one of which is the provision of £150,000 additional capital, to concur with the Government of India's approval of the extension by the Nizam to the 31st of December, 1891, of the right of selection by the company of certain coal mines which are specified in Clause 3 (a) of the concession. To this offer no reply has yet been received. Except as above, the Secretary of State has declined to approve of the extension by the Nizam of any further privileges to the company.

Sir G. Campbell asked if the concession was to be confined to coal mines only.

Sir J. Gorst said the concession contemplated referred to coal mines only.

FOOD SUPPLIES OF CEYLON.

Sir E. Watkin asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Colonial Office proposed to instruct the new governor of Ceylon, Sir Arthur Havelock, to investigate the incidents of the paddy tax upon the food supplies of Ceylon, and to report how far the statements that the people of the country are on "half rations" of food, and that evictions by the Government had led to starvation of the people and to disease and death, are well founded, and to suggest any remedy.

Baron H. DE WORMS: The Secretary of State will certainly direct Sir Arthur Havelock's particular attention to this serious matter, although it is hoped that the results of a very careful investigation will have been received before he assumes the government.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

Sir J. GORST made the usual financial statement, and began by showing the improvement in the revenue in 1888-9 over that of 1887-8. The deficit in the latter year was Rx. 2,028,832, half of which, however, was mainly attributable to the conversion of India Four per Cent. Stock, but the deficit for the year 1888-9 was only Rx. 698,000, which, he said, was considerably less than the original estimate, and from this he argued that the finances of India were far more satisfactory than was anticipated would be the case a year ago. The estimated revenue for the current year showed an improvement of Rx. 587,000, resulting in a surplus of Rx. 693,300, which was made up of an increase in the revenue from land and opium, and an improvement in the rate of exchange. Salt had also contributed to the improvement, but this, he observed, was not due to any general increase in the consumption of salt, but to abnormal circumstances, and in this connection he pointed out that the Government by means of railways and canals, and by opening up new salt sources, had lowered the cost of salt considerably more than the tax has raised it. Coming next to the question of expenditure he asserted that the greatest care was taken by the Indian Government and, as an example, he mentioned that a committee had recently been investigating the expenditure of the Civil Departments, which has resulted in substantial economies, although he admitted that Civil expenditure always had increased and would, he hoped, continue to increase. The expenditure on the Army had also increased, but he hoped the increase was now finished; and as to the special defence works Rx. 6,000,000 had already been spent exclusive of the expenditure on railways, and it was expected that a further outlay of Rx. 2,500,000 would be necessary before the works were completed. He then explained the system of provincial finance, remarking that the policy of the Government had for many years been directed to encourage provincial finance and administration, and dealing, in conclusion, with the commercial condition of the country he showed that a large annual saving had been effected by the conversion of the Four per Cent. and Four-and-a-Half per Cent. stocks to Three-and-a-Half and Four per Cent. respectively, the saving in the former amounting to £266,600 per annum. There were also other signs of prosperity, and the exports last year amounted, he said, to six and a-half millions over those of the previous year, while the imports showed an excess of four and a-half millions.

Mr. BRADLAUGH, who had a motion on the paper expressing regret that the Indian Budget had been delayed to so late a period of the Session, declined to move it, on the ground that so few members were present, and he protested against better opportunities not being afforded for discussing Indian matters; after which he proceeded to criticise in much detail the printed financial statement recently issued from the India Office, and in particular he complained that the famine insurance fund had been misapplied.

Sir R. TEMPLE, pointing out that the House had already had three debates on Indian questions during the Session, denied the justice of Mr. Bradlaugh's charge against the Government of unduly delaying the Indian Budget, and, speaking generally with regard to the Government of India, he strongly deprecated any interference in matters of detail, which, he said, should be left entirely to the local Executive. As to the famine insurance fund, it was never actually formed, and only existed in the shape of a resolution which had never been put into a practical shape. Referring next to the material condition of the country, he pointed out that India had always paid her way, taking one year with another, without incurring debt, including the cost of one great war and two great famines. Moreover, she had defended the frontier and placed it in an impregnable state, had taken over the administration of Burma and had expended large sums on education, science and art, sanitation, and medicine, all of which had been done in the face of a damaging fall in the currency.

Sir G. CAMPBELL, in the course of a discursive speech, agreed with an opinion expressed by Sir R. TEMPLE in answer to Mr. BRADLAUGH that the less the House of Commons interfered with India the better. He took, on the whole, an unfavourable view of Indian finance, and made several complaints of the Government, such as the continued maintenance of excise in Bengal, the system of railway guarantees, and the abandonment of the famine fund.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE also criticised the excise duties, advocated the commencement of the long-promised inquiry into Indian administration, and urged that justice should be done to the Uncovenanted Service in regard to their silver pensions.

Mr. SCHWANN dwelt upon the importance of improving and extending the railway system of India.

Mr. J. MACLEAN urged that the salaries of the officials at the India Office should be placed under the control of Parliament, as in the case of the other public departments, and advocated the reduction of letter postage to India, which, he contended, was excessive as compared with the postage to other countries.

Mr. M'LAREN regretted that Sir J. GORST should have sneered at the sentimental feelings of those who advocated the curtailment of the opium and drink traffic, and emphasised the importance of economy in regard to our Indian administration.

Sir R. FOWLER expressed the hope that more time would be found next Session for the discussion of Indian affairs.

Mr. MACNEIL also spoke, and after a general reply from Sir J. GORST the usual resolution was agreed to.

LEPROSY: ITS PATHOLOGY AND ITS CURABILITY.

In view of the strong interest recently aroused and which still obtains in the general subject of Leprosy, its alleged increased prevalence, its supposed contagiousness and incurability, it may be permissible for a layman to contribute a few observations bearing on the present position of the controversy. This I venture to do—of course with the utmost deference to pathologists and physicians—because of my having been rather closely acquainted with the researches and opinions of two medical men in Western India nearly twenty years ago, one an Englishman and the other a Hindu. Their respective conclusions, as it seems to me, are rather confirmed than superseded by current opinions founded upon recent researches, and on the striking object lesson of Molokai, as delineated by the devoted efforts of the sensible and sainted Father Damien.

2. It will be a substantial contribution to the present discussion, as formulated in the resolutions adopted under the presidency of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, if I do no more than draw the attention of medical investigators and other scientific men to the valuable treatise by the former of the two Bombay investigators, Dr. Henry Vandyke Carter, then of the Bombay Medical Service, since retired, but whose counsel would, no doubt, still be available. That treatise is entitled Report on the Prevalence and Characters of Leprosy in the Bombay Presidency, based on the official returns of 1867. It is included in "the Transactions of the Bombay Medical and Physical Society, vol. xi., 1871," a serial which is, doubtless, on the shelves of most medical libraries in this metropolis. It was also published separately "Bombay Education Society's Press, 1872." The report is accompanied with two coloured maps, also tables in great variety, the often perplexing vital statistics of the different castes and races being thus brought out with utmost explicitness. Though without any pretension to expository style, this report of Dr. Carter's might be cited as a model of careful statement and discriminating conclusions. In these respects its perusal and application to later researches would serve to abate some of the extreme and unscientific assumptions that have recently found eager popular credence; while, on the other hand, its guarded and deliberate conclusions will serve to give point and practical guidance towards the remedial proposals that have now come up for definite consideration. The writer studiously avoids controversy. He does, indeed, notice, to put aside, what he regards as the impotent conclusion of the London College of Physicians in 1862, and the "disproportionate outcome" of the "elaborate official enquiry" in 1867. Dr. Carter submits that his report furnishes "sufficient data for deciding, 1st, on the necessity of asylums for lepers; 2nd, on the sex, age, and caste of likely occupants of such asylums; and, 3rd, on the localities where asylums are most needed." If it be objected that these conclusions only apply to Western India, to this I would suggest two replies:—(a) the survey includes such wide varieties of climate, conditions and habits of life in the patients, that deductions may be drawn applying to almost any country where the disease is endemic; (b) Dr. Carter's historical and pathological investigation is so thorough as to cover almost any conceivable variation in type or origin of the malady.

4. Consistently with the non-controversial tone of his essay, Dr. Carter says scarcely anything on the sometimes vexed question of contagiousness, leaving opinions on that to be formed from his general statements. He seems to allow, for granted, the possibility of the disease being communicated by intimate contact; and his proposals for "strict segregation of all indigent lepers as a preliminary measure," also for the establishment of asylums, proceed on that basis. While the general inferences in his report on this part of the subject serve to minimise the more exaggerated popular notions as to the dangers of contagion, his scientific investigations are directed mainly to trace the influence of hereditary or collateral sources of the disease, on which, in common with most Indian medical officers, he lays great stress, whilst duly allowing for the wide gaps in the history of individual cases, to which inevitable deficiency he attributes much that is obscure in the pathological history. As to the question of increase or otherwise of the malady, his conclusions on the data before him were, "that true leprosy is declining in Gujerat, stationary or slowly decreasing in the Deccan, but fully maintained or even increasing in the Konkan."

5. That phrase "true leprosy" (the elephantiasis of the Greeks and lepra of the Arabians), as distinguished from "white leprosy"—a complaint, as Dr. Carter remarks, "of infinitely less severity than the above, with which, indeed, it has hardly anything in common"—may have an important bearing on the numerical statistics which have, of late, been bandied about in rather wholesale fashion. Taking the 8,200 cases named in the returns of ten districts available, and adding pro ratâ for the rest, he concludes that the whole number in the Bombay Presidency, with its then accepted population of 17,000,000 "would probably, after making deductions, be quite 15,000; indeed, this guess is probably under the mark." Now, applying this to the whole population of India as now ascertained, 253,982,590, we get a total of 225,000 for the whole of India, both British and Native territories. This, at first sight, approximates to the 250,000 recently assumed as the number of lepers in India. But then comes the weighty qualification that Dr. Carter's statistics relate to that portion of India where lepers are notoriously in far the greatest numbers; and as the 254,000,000 include the Native States, it seems only reasonable to suppose that 250,000 leper population, recently assumed, must include large numbers of the "white leprosy" which has nothing whatever to do with leprosy proper, and only confuses the scientific medical discussion now on hand. Of course, the statistics must include the "anæsthetic" or "atrophic" form of the disease, which so often precedes the final tubercular form; but it is quite right to include these incipient cases of true leprosy.

6. In turning to such of my notes as are available relating to the late Dr. Bhau Daji's experiments on leprosy and his search after some specific remedy for the disease, we approach a somewhat hopeful side of the dismal subject. Although, mainly because of the early death of that lamented Hindu physician, only scant materials are now accessible, sufficient is known regarding his treatment—by myself and others then in Bombay, who saw numbers of his leper patients—to make it well worth while recalling attention to an episode of much interest as bearing both on the pathology and the therapeutics of leprosy. As to the fact that progress had been made towards finding a remedy for the disease, there could be no mistake. Many of the patients were seen at the Doctor's house by myself and several other European residents in Bombay, including medical men. Some of us saw them at different stages of improvement, and comparison was facilitated by photographs of many of the cases, as when first taken in hand, presenting the unmistakable symptoms of an advanced stage of the unsightly malady. Also, the particulars given by several of the patients themselves proved how they had been raised from helplessness and despair by a few months' course of Dr. Bhau's treatment. These recitals included the medical history of a well-known and much-respected Mahratta missionary teacher; and I have before me notes of two cases at Sattara which had been treated by two different medical (American) missionaries with the remedy supplied by Dr. Bhau, and which he was then using. In these instances the change in the mens' condition, both of whom had presented some of the worst aspects of the disease, was that of satisfactory and hopeful convalescence. The well-known protuberances, blotches, and sores, which both had presented when first taken in hand, had all but disappeared; the patients had been restored to hope, and were enabled to resume their usual avocations. One of Dr. Bhau's cases, that of a French gentleman, I believe from Mauritius or Reunion, but who only remained a short time in Bombay and then in seclusion, and, therefore, not seen by any other observer, was understood to have been such as might be described as an entire cure. Another case was that of a lad, the son of one of the European policemen of Bombay, who had been reduced to an entirely crippled condition, but was restored to health and strength. He was brought to me by his father, Mr. C. Hallums, then retiring from India, in order to demonstrate his recovery. The lad's countenance bore traces of the former effects of the malady in the abnormal prominence of the brows and cheek bones, but the skin was smooth and healthy in appearance, and he could then run or jump about like any other vigorous lad of his years (about twelve or fourteen). His father rejoiced in what he justly regarded as the restoration of his son to the prospect of a future healthy life. Of the subsequent history of the case I have no means of knowing.

7. Here it may be remarked that many of us considered that Dr. Bhau Daji and his tentative, but, so far, successful, experiments were not treated quite fairly by the medical profession in Bombay, especially by its official representatives. He had asked to be granted the free and unfettered use of one of the "wards for incurables" of the Jamsetjee Hospital; but the medical officers insisted that he should first explain to them all the details of his treatment and the remedies used, together with other conditions with which Dr. Bhau did not see his way to comply at that stage of his investigations. He had been collecting his notes, and preparing drawings and diagnoses of the typical cases with a view to drawing up a full report, which had been asked for by Government; but his sudden prostration by aphasia cut short his design, and his ever-to-be-lamented early death closed the question. His brother, Narayan Daji, also a graduate of Grant Medical College, who had been associated with him in his investigations, was, in turn, unhappily carried off soon after in an attack of fever.

8. It is not desirable to renew the controversy of the period; but I shall be ready to join issue with any one who should venture to revive the exacting demands for a cut and dry demonstration of the specific and perfect efficacy of the remedies used by this painstaking and truly scientific Hindu physician. He had used the Gurjun oil, of which the partial but valuable mitigating effects have been again proved by Mr. Clifford and Father Damien at Molokai, as also by several medical authorities who have studied the subject of leprosy. He probably also used the Chulmugri oil, which some of his medical rivals and critics pounced upon as possibly being the infallible specific; but I do not think he depended much, if at all, on this. It is probably well known to Sir Joseph Fayrer and other experts that the Bengal Medical Service had long since tested and virtually abandoned that drug as not being a permanent remedy for leprosy. These and other medicinal oils that have been tried are useful, though only as palliatives.* But the plant, on an infusion of which Dr. Bhau Daji chiefly and finally relied as a specific is one of the order of umbelliferæ; it is known to myself and a few others who were in Bombay at the time.

9. Then here arises an important consideration which is of general bearing on the whole question of the curability of leprosy. The researches of pathologists, and notably those of Dr. Vandyke Carter, indicate that because of the frequent deep hereditary taint and the subtle or complicated origin of the malady, no perfect and permanent eradication can be expected without a long course of proper regimen, and a protracted administration of the remedy which may be finally decided upon as specific to the deep-seated disease. In passively resisting the efforts made to drive Dr. Bhau Daji into some heroic method of treatment and a cut-and-dry proclamation of an infallible cure for leprosy, he showed what I think will eventually be regarded as a just respect for the healing art—derived in great measure from his study of Sanskrit medicine. His was a praiseworthy scientific reserve. He willingly gave—sometimes in bulk—samples of the remedies he used; and I believe that through the India Office he sent supplies to the Belgian Government, and also to the Colonial Office for experiment in the West Indies.

10. To sum up: that leprosy is curable, before the advanced and fatal stage is reached, there need, I feel persuaded, be no doubt whatever; that the popular view as to its inevitable contagiousness is a much exaggerated one, must be evident to medical men who have had experience in localities where leprosy is endemic; that the segregation of lepers and their continuous medical treatment in proper asylums in those countries where leprosy prevails is one of the requirements of the day; but to re-acclimatise the malady in England by opening a leprosy asylum here, thereby inviting lepers to come or return to this country, is certainly not desirable, and neither on scientific nor humanitarian grounds should such a step be advocated.—I am, yours truly,

W. MARTIN WOOD.

A COMMITTEE will assemble on the 3rd inst. at the Murree Depôt, under paragraph 753 of the Pay Code, to take over the property and effects of Captain Fenton, of the Fort William Arsenal, who was removed from Kashmir in a state of insanity contracted while out hunting.

* The Japanese medicine, said to be the family secret of Dr. Goto, of the Kitai Hospital at Tokio, probably belongs to this class of emulsive remedies. Father Damien, two or three years before his decease, sent particulars of the Japan treatment to a Parsee gentleman of Bombay, one of whose family was afflicted with leprosy. The outward application, administered in hot baths, is called "Kai-gio Kiosko Yoko Yoiku," and the internal medicine "Fei Ketu Reue."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

GENERAL LUCK will command the cavalry camp to be held near Lahore about the end of January.

THE proposals of the Commander-in-Chief for improving the Silledar system in the Bengal Cavalry have been submitted to the Government of India. Their adoption will probably depend mainly on financial considerations, further outlay being necessary to maintain Silledar regiments in an efficient state.

THE Kashmir Rifles, who are composed chiefly of Gurkhas, will shortly be armed with sniders and sent to garrison Gilgit.

IT has been decided that the work of re-organising the military forces of the Native States shall remain directly under the Government of India in the Foreign Department.

THE three Commanders-in-Chief are each giving a cup to be shot for this season by the batteries of their respective Presidencies, while General Nairne also offers a prize for competition.

THE proposals of the Commander-in-Chief for improving the Silladar system in the Bengal Cavalry have been submitted to the Government of India. Their adoption will probably depend mainly on financial considerations, further outlay being necessary to maintain Silladar regiments in an efficient state.

THE dates on which the regiments going home on relief will leave Bombay are as follows:—D, E, F and G Batteries, A Brigade, on Oct. 12; 8th Hussars, Oct. 26; 2nd Battalion Leicester (to Aden), Nov. 23; 4th Battalion Rifle Brigade, Dec. 28; and 2nd Battalion Norfolk, Jan. 25.

MAJOR MELLIS has left Simla for Bhopal and Poona. At the latter place he is to confer with the Commander-in-Chief and Local Government regarding the measures to be taken for utilising the resources of Native States in the Bombay Presidency. These will probably include a Transport Corps for field service.

A MOST dastardly murder has been committed at Dinapur. Private Bryne, of the Connaught Rangers, stabbed Colour-Sergeant Bowen in the heart with his bayonet while he was asleep in his room. Bowen was an intelligent non-commissioned officer, and generally liked in his regiment. The murderer has been arrested.

AT a General Court-Martial recently held at Hyderabad under the presidency of Colonel A. L. McNair, 7th Bombay Cavalry, Gunners Thomas Barnes, John Richards and Edward Lee, and Drivers Henry Schaffer, George Charlesworth and John Wood, all of F-B., R.A., were severally arraigned on a charge of joining in a meeting on the 28th and 29th May, 1889, by combining amongst themselves, and with other soldiers of the said battery not to attend the Commanding Officer's marching order parade, which was to take place on the morning of the 29th May, 1889; in consequence of which combination they, with other soldiers of the said battery, left their barracks on the 28th May, 1889, and did not return until the 29th May, 1889, and the said marching order parade could not be held. With the exception of Gunner Lee, who was pronounced not guilty, and honourably acquitted of the charge, the remaining five prisoners were each sentenced by the Court to a fixed term of imprisonment for two years in India—a sentence which was subsequently confirmed by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief.

In these degenerate days when anger is the prerogative of a handful of bad mannered individuals who give vent to their passion within the eminently safe precincts of the National Council Chamber, it is perhaps well that the attention of the public should now and again be directed to the stirring incidents of the times when men "did and dared"; when blood flowed like water, when the term "coward" was an opprobious insult which no apologies could remove, and no regrets set aside. And, assuredly, if Scotland has done nothing for the British Empire more than supply lessons of indomitable courage, and of superb heroism, not in vain has she become merged into the union of races which bow the knee to the Monarch of this Realm.

This being the case we gladly welcome Lady Middleton's very successful and happy attempt to embody in verse some of the gruesome traditions and romantic legends which are linked with the family history of the clan to which she is proud—and naturally so—to belong. Of course, it would be hopeless to suppose otherwise than that to appreciate "The tragedy of Dunphail," the reader must have the blood of the "Cummings" in his veins, but apart from this the tale is by no means void of interest, and the poetry is far above the average of the ordinary run of every day scribblers. Take, for example, the lines which pourtray a lover's fate on beholding the quivering corpse of him she worshipped—

"She gave no cry; she never made a moan,
But stood with eyes that strained, with severed life,
And passed a hand across her misted gaze,
Unconscious. Then, as some light water-sedge
Sways 'fore the whelm of swift down-driving wave
A moment, ere it bends to rise no more;
So sways her form; then sank an insensate heap,
Lifeless, upon the dead."

It is, perhaps, no mean praise to record that a poem, written primarily for the family fireside, is readable in the far wider circle of those who can appreciate the beauties of nature, and who can find the blood run quicker in their veins as they learn the deeds of prowess which Lady Middleton has so graphically recorded in verse of stirling merit and marked ability.

THE LAND OF MANFRED.*

"If the God of the Jews had seen my kingdom—the Terra di Larolo, Calabria, Sicily, and Aphalia—he would not have so often praised that land he promised to the Jews and bestowed upon them." Thus proclaimed Frederick II. on the occasion of his return from a crusade against infidels to the charming region of Italy, over which he held sway. If the panegyric be well merited, and there is not much room for doubt on the point, Miss Ross may well be pardoned that she is lavish in her praise of a land which certainly, according to the account which she has given of her rambles, is of surpassing beauty and attractiveness. According to this accomplished traveller, the perils of Southern Italy—and perhaps, en passant, it may be well to localise the "land of Manfred" by proclaiming that it contains at least one place of note familiar to all Anglo-Indians—the well-known Brindisi—consists "solely of bad inns." But even in this respect there are notable exceptions; what, for instance, could be said in disparagement of an innkeeper who made no charge for his rooms, and only consented to a reimbursement of the money actually out of pocket? At least such a hostelry possesses the merit of cheapness. Even the new born school of Radical purists could not find fault with a lodging conducted on these lines—at least on the score of economy.

As regards the people themselves the reader will be agreeably disappointed, expecting possibly to find born rascals and thieves at every turn. It is as gratifying as surprising to learn that the inhabitants are mostly plain, unsophisticated toilers of the soil—honest, straightforward, and full of happy gaiety. Merry and light-hearted in their ways, they are the very "butterflies" of humanity, "taking no care for the morrow," and indifferent to all the plots and ambitions which in many places of Europe renders life a series of anguishes, and existence a perpetual struggle with destiny. It may be gathered, however, from Miss Ross's most attractive book of chit-chat anent the land of Horace and other classical associations that a knowledge of Italian is an all-important desideratum. The London "'Arry" would find things most uncommonly "cross-grained." And it is not for the ignorant "globe-trotter" that such a volume will have its attraction, but rather for those whose mind is imbued with a love of the venerable scenes of antiquity, and can appreciate the sanctity which attaches to the reminiscences of Rome's proudest traditions, for those with eyes to admire and soul to appreciate. To such Miss Ross's work will be welcome, and more than welcome, for its tone is unaffected, and its language chaste and elegant.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.—I.

THE Secretary of State's annual statement of the Finances of India was brought forward, as usual, at the close of the session, and before an almost empty House. Honourable Members, wearied with prolonged deliberations on the never-ending subject of Irish grievances, did not care to be bored further by the recital of details concerning India, of which they knew nothing, and for which they cared less. Mr. Bradlaugh might take upon himself to express his regret at this feeling of indifference towards the mighty Empire which he is trying to persuade himself he represents; but the majority of Her Majesty's Commons did not share in that regret. They carefully stayed away, and hardly a "baker's dozen" remained to listen to the ponderous pessimisms of the junior member for Northampton, or to the poetic rhapsodies of Sir Richard Temple concerning the financial condition of British India. Perhaps in having shown such indifference the House also showed its common sense. For, as the Pall Mall Gazette puts it, "How many members understand Indian Finance, and who doubts that the Indian Government is both competent and honest?" We are glad to find the recognised organ of discontent giving this good character "chit" to the Indian Government, notwithstanding that there are several "enlightened Radicals" who, while following the lead of that journal, hold that the Government of India is neither competent nor honest. Mr. Bradlaugh, of course, holds that opinion, and having taken the gloomiest view which he possibly could of the situation, more than hinted that the Indian Famine Insurance Fund had been embezzled or fraudulently made away with by Indian officials. Ignorance, like poverty, makes people acquainted with strange companions, and so we find the Globe, which shares Mr. Bradlaugh's ignorance of Indian subjects, giving its support to him in this matter. "Where," it asks, "is that famine insurance fund which was devised to make provision against one source of financial embarrassment? It is a myth. Sir Richard Temple states that it never had any tangible existence. All the contrary assurances, therefore, which have been given by Ministers from time to time must have had a misleading character. This being the case, we entirely agree with Mr. Bradlaugh that it would be advisable, for the sake of common honesty, to get rid of the imposture once for all." But Sir Richard Temple did not say what the Globe states he did. He said:—"No fund of that kind had ever actually been raised; but it was resolved by the Government of India to set aside a portion of the revenue, amounting to about one and a-half million sterling, which was to be expended on public works in the event of a recurrence of famine. The additional revenue required for this purpose had been raised, not by the imposition of new taxes, but by a development of old ones. When it was found necessary to obtain an additional revenue it was deemed preferable to suspend the appropriation of this portion of the revenue for this purpose rather than to raise the sum required by new taxation. If it were asked what had been done with it the answer was that it had gone for the defence of the North-West Frontier." If the safety of India required that defence it is no casuistry to hold that it was better to provide for it in this way than to burden the people with fresh taxation. Opinions may differ on this point; but Sir Richard Temple's assertion gives a flat contradiction to Mr. Bradlaugh's assurance that "the Government had imposed increased taxes for the specific purpose of forming a fund for famine alone."

Of course, the salt-tax, about which its denouncers understand next to nothing, came in for the usual amount of ignorant criticism and unqualified denunciation. Mr. Bradlaugh naturally denounced it, and next evening's Globe, emulating his ignorance on the subject, denounces it also. "It is a barbarous tax, suitable enough for Mogul finance, but not for English. The withers of the poor—nine tenths of India's population come into that sad category—are severely wrung by it; but the well-to-do classes do not feel it a bit. Abolish this iniquitous impost, and every humble household in the huge Peninsula will be thankful for British rule; continue it, and latent dissatisfaction will also continue among the masses." So far the Globe; but all who have had practical experience of government in India know that this is sentimentalism wasted, and that, were the tax abolished to-morrow, the poorest ryot would not acknowledge or comprehend that any benefit had accrued to him; only the salt merchants would understand the blessing. But although no one will defend on principle any tax which stands in the way of the poor obtaining such a homely necessary of life, what is the real truth regarding the incidence of this tax? Sir John Gorst told it simply and plainly, and at the same time administered a well-deserved snub to those "friends of humanity" who are always moaning over the sorrows of the people of India and the shortcomings of the Government there. His words were :—

"Much had been said with regard to the salt-tax. He had admitted over and over again on behalf of his noble friend the Secretary of State for India that he did not regard the increase in the salt-tax as in any way desirable. It had been raised with reluctance on his part, but there had been much exaggeration as to the dire effects of this increase. In Bengal from the year 1836 to the year 1880 the tax on salt was almost constantly below 3¼ rupees per maund. In 1880 it was reduced to two rupees, and remained at that rate till last year, when the state of the Indian finances necessitated its being raised to 2½ rupees. Calculating that a family of six persons used 11lb. or 12lb. of salt a year, a whole family would pay a tax of about two rupees and one anna, and each person about 5½ annas, which was an increased burden of about one anna on each person. He regretted even this small increase of the tax; but it was foolish to exaggerate its effects, and to contend that the whole people were starving in consequence of its imposition. Some hon. members who had spoken belonged to that class of critics who found fault with everything that the Government of Great Britain had done in India. They drew their inspiration from the speeches of some of those ambitious Brahmins who attended congresses for the purpose of distinguishing themselves. As long as they continued to do that they would no doubt make speeches which were amusing and interesting; but their speeches would not greatly assist the Government of Great Britain in solving the problem of the Government of India."

True and to the point as these remarks were, we do not suppose that they will have the slightest effect in converting to common sense the ignorant and mischievous agitators who delight to bring into contempt British rule in India whenever they can find an opportunity to do so. They will return again to the false charges they have made, notwithstanding that the growing prosperity of India is hourly giving the lie direct to their calumnies.

A CORNER IN QUININE.

WHAT MIGHT OCCUR IN THE PRESENT PECULIAR STATE OF THE MARKET.

Some attention having been directed to a letter in a recent issue of the Financial News about a "Corner in Quinine," a representative has been investigating the subject. There has evidently been a considerable decrease in the import of cinchona bark from Ceylon, whilst the stock in London is comparatively small and of bad quality, and the Java cultivation will not make up for the falling off in the imports from South America and Ceylon. The English Government commenced to cultivate the bark in the Neilgherries Hills in India about seventeen years ago as an experiment. They succeeded so well that an enormous profit was obtained on it. This encouraged private companies to cultivate it in Ceylon, after the failure there of the coffee industry. Most of them, however, made the mistake of cultivating succirubra, for which there was only a very limited demand, instead of officinalis, for which there was an unlimited demand, for the manufacture of quinine. The chief use for succirubra appears to be to decorate the windows of druggists' shops; it is hardly ever used for making quinine.

The planters in Ceylon at first made so much money out of the growth of succirubra, although it was the wrong sort, that other planters commenced its cultivation. The result was soon apparent. As the cultivation increased down went the prices. At one time succirubra bark could be obtained at the rate of from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. per pound, whilst the imports from South America stopped almost entirely. The price of the bark has continued low up to the present time; in fact, most of the Ceylon planters have given up its cultivation in disgust in favour of that of tea, besides which the price of the bark which now comes from Ceylon has so much depreciated as to scarcely realise the amount of the dock charges incurred upon it, without reckoning freight and the original cost.

The statistics on the question are somewhat startling. In the season of 1885-6 (that is, from October 1 to July 30) no less than 13,300,000lbs. of bark were received in this country, in 1886-7 there were 12,000,000lbs., in 1887-8 there were 9,300,000lbs., and in 1888-9 8,600,000lbs., which shows an alarming decrease instead of the increase which should naturally have resulted.

In these years the prices were as follow :—In 1885 quinine was 3s. 8d. per oz., in 1886 it was 3s. 1d., in 1887 it was 2s. 6d., in 1888 it was 2s. 4d., and at the present time it is only 1s. 2½d. Between now and next December (not including August) already considerably more than half a million ounces of quinine have been sold by the bears. It is a remarkable fact that when there was 50 per cent. more of the raw material to work with the price was three times more than it now is.

An authority on the question considers that it does not now pay to manufacture; indeed, he cannot see how it is possible to make a profit on it. He is also of opinion that there will be a further falling-off in the production of the bark. It is five years before the bark-trees are fit for cutting, and meanwhile the demand for quinine naturally increases. He further states that bear sellers, who are almost exclusively German manufacturers, have been selling to an enormous extent for forward delivery; but when these deliveries became due, by offering a small quantity on the spot at a low rate, they have been able to buy back their own contracts at a considerable reduction on the price at which they sold. This, he adds, has been going on for a considerable time, until now they have brought quinine to its present absurdly low quotation.

With regard to the present stock of cinchona in London, on May 31 there were 65,700 packages, against 76,500 on May 31, 1885, showing another falling off to the extent of over 10,000 packages. A great deal of the present stock is also said to be absolute rubbish.

A few years ago quinine was selling freely at 15s. per ounce, and there is no reason why it should not be selling at the same price now the consumption is greater. The authority referred to is of the opinion that it is quite possible for a capitalist or a syndicate to acquire the present supply, and, by taking delivery when tendered, create a corner, the effect of which would be largely felt. At the same time, he says there is no possibility of any serious loss to investors at the present price.—Financial News.

DEFENCE OF INDIA.

THE NIZAM'S OFFER.

It was announced two years ago that the Nizam of Hyderabad had made the princely offer to the Government of India to contribute 60 lakhs for the purposes of the military defence of the Indian frontier. Although that gift was, after much deliberation, not accepted in the precise form in which it was made, there is no doubt that it produced an immense impression throughout Hindostan, and that it led to the supreme Government taking up in a serious manner the long-debated question of the military co-operation of the feudatory States. The loyal and patriotic act of the Nizam has therefore borne excellent fruit, while the ruler of Hyderabad has been at the same time spared much of the expenditure which he expressed his willingness to incur. It is necessary to state that although his offer received as its recognition only the cordial thanks of the Queen-Empress and the Viceroy, the Nizam has never wavered in the position he took up in 1887, and that both he and his able Prime Minister, Sir Asman Jah, have incessantly expressed their eagerness to carry out in any way that the Government of India might advise or direct the military arrangements necessary to give practical effect to the Nizam's letter of August 1887. The Times now states that the necessary measures are about to be taken to place a certain portion of the Nizam's own army under the special training required to adapt them to the requirements of modern warfare. For some reasons it is to be regretted that there has been more delay in dealing with the principal State of India than with some of the smaller and less important, especially when it is remembered that the whole question only assumed a practical character after the Nizam had set a laudable example and given to what should be a national movement the required impetus. After having organised the Punjaub States, and concluded arrangements more or less definite and durable with the Rajput and Central Indian principalities, the Government of India is about to begin the consideration of some similiar agreement with the Nizam, and it is believed that the result will be that that Prince will place 5,000 of his own troops under the special training stipulated for in all cases. As the Nizam's own personal army numbers 8,000 cavalry and 36,000 infantry, it will be seen that his contingent has not been fixed at an excessively high figure. Moreover, the best of the Nizam's own troops are sufficiently well drilled to justify our saying that they could without much difficulty and loss of time be trained until they were passed as efficient under the new regulations. Hyderabad's contribution to the war strength of India may therefore be computed at 5,000 disciplined troops in the first place, but it cannot be forgotten that the contingents supplied by the other States are in a sense due to the action of the Nizam in 1887. The total contingent from the native States will not fall short of 30,000 fighting men, a large proportion of whom will be excellent cavalry, and this addition to the offensive power of the Government of India must add immensely to the security of the north-west frontier, and to our capacity for carrying on war within Afghanistan itself.

A GAME of native polo was played at Simla on the 5th inst. beyond Mushobra, the sides being Ladakis from Simla against those from the interior. The Simla side was ultimately victorious. The match was witnessed by several Europeans, and one distinguished officer, who understood the game, took part. It is proposed to invite the Ladakis to have a match at Annandale, when the dry weather commences.

THE recent military expeditions of the Government of India, should open out the orchid trade. A recent traveller in the Lushai country writes in enthusiastic terms of the rich vegetation there:—"An orchid hunter in Lushai would go crazy and lose his head to a certainty. Even if he escaped decapitation by the ever eager Howlon or Kuki, who are always on the qui vive for scalps, he'd go crazy with delight at myriads of orchids surrounding him on all sides in the lower valleys. Passing up along the streams at the Plairang or Sillengrette, the scenery is as different to that on the summits of the ranges as the hills are to the plains. Here you wander along the stream, through pools, and over massy rocks, now nearly suspending yourself, Absalomlike, in the long lines of creepers that hang from tree to tree, from bough to bough; above you the sky is scarcely seen, the sun is hardly felt, so thick is the overhanging foliage, making one huge archway of emerald green and ruddy bronze above one's head. On either side huge kattan trees with their star-shaped trunks raise their mighty branches above the lesser vegetation, from whose outstretched arms hang innumerable creepers covered thickly with orchids; the trunks of the trees are dotted with orchids, the very roots form a bed for orchids, orchids above one orchids below one, and on every side. Unfortunately they were not in flower."

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes:—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole proprietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1889.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 20th Aug.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 18th Aug.; and from Calcutta to the 18th Aug.

THE Viceroy's tour along the North-West Frontier will be an extensive one, his Excellency visiting the Khyber Pass, Kohat, Bannu, Dera Ismail Khan, and the Gomal Pass, afterwards going on to Quetta and Peshin.

AT the meeting of the Legislative Council, on August 14th, the Hon. Mr. Scoble moved for the appointment of Select Committees on the Central Provinces Municipalities and Village Conservancy Bills, and the Hon. Mr. Hutchins introduced a Bill amending the Lunatic Asylums Act of 1858. The Bill amending the Official Trustees' and Administrator General's Acts was also introduced, and the preliminary Report on the Cantonment Bill presented.

RULES will shortly be framed under the Merchandise Marks Act for the guidance of Indian customs officials, on the model of those in force under the English Act.

THE Government of India is considering how it can find the eight lakhs of rupees that are required annually for carrying out the proposed reforms in the Bengal Cavalry.

THE despatch regarding the abolition of the fifty-five years' rule in the Public Works Department has not yet actually been sent to the Secretary of State, the matter being under the consideration of the Financial Department. The conclusions arrived at will be first embodied in a Resolution by the Government of India, who have taken up the matter with a view to effecting some modification of the existing regulation.

THE Government of India are consulting the various Chambers of Commerce before pronouncing an opinion upon the English postal scheme, under which it is suggested that Sunday should become the day of departure for the home mails from Bombay during fair weather, and Saturday in the monsoon.

THE Commander-in-Chief will make a short tour in the hill cantonments below Simla early in October. He will start on the 22nd of the same month for Bombay, where he inspects the fortifications, and will then proceed to the N.W. Frontier to accompany the Viceroy on his tour along the border and to Baluchistan. Sir Frederick Roberts will visit the various Camps of Exercise, and attend the Meerut Rifle Meeting before proceeding to Calcutta in January. Thereafter he will visit Assam. His contemplated trip to Burma will probably be given up.

THERE will, according to the Englishman, be a vacancy on the Viceroy's Personal Staff at the end of the year unless Major Rowan Hamilton is not obliged to rejoin his regiment. In the event of the Staff losing the services of this officer it is rumoured that a successor may be chosen either from the Wiltshire Regiment or the Bengal Infantry.

THE Fort St. George Gazette announces that the Madras Government will leave Ootacamund on Sept. 14th. This reduces this year's stay on the hills over one month compared with the average of the past few years.

HIS Excellency the Governor will leave Ootacamund on the 5th and go to Negapatam, Tranquebar, and Kumbakonam, and arrive at Simla on Oct. 5th or 6th.

THE rumours at Rawalpindi and elsewhere of a Jowaki expedition are quite groundless. The Jowakis are absolutely quiet.

THE telegraph line in the Chittagong Hills has been completed to Lungsing, half way between Demagiri and Lungleh.

A FIRST batch of 250 coolies left Manipur for the Chin country on Aug. 6th with Lieutenant Brackenbury in charge.

THE troops to operate from Chittagong into the Lushai country will be exactly the same as advanced to Lungleh under Colonel Tregear, and with the same staff as far as possible. Brigadier-General Symonds will command the force operating from the side of Burma. This latter will be upwards of 2,000 strong, and will include the King's Own Scottish Borderers and the 2nd Battalion 4th Gurkhas.

ON the last anniversary of the Queen's birthday H.H. the Thakore of Bhownugger placed at the disposal of Government Rs. 30,000 to be invested as an endowment fund for the training and maintenance of nurses at a Bombay hospital. His Highness has now, unsolicited, given for the same benevolent object a further sum of Rs. 70,000, and has requested that the endowment thus created may be entitled "The Lady Reay Fund for Nurses."

THE Meingoon Prince has escaped from Pondicherry. The Colombo police have been instructed to watch for him.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has left Calcutta for Assam. Lady and Miss Bayley accompany him on tour. At Dhubri he meets the Chief Commissioner of Assam to discuss emigration and other topics affecting both provinces.

A BANGALORE paper understands that Mr. Sanderson, "the great elephant catcher," as well as Mr. Theobalds, a retired officer of the Madras Forest Department, will remain in Mysore until the arrival of Prince Albert Victor, when it is arranged that the Prince shall, if he wishes, witness the Keddah operations in Mysore.

SIRDAR MUHAMMAD AYUB KHAN and party have arrived at Murree after their two months' sojourn in Kashmir, and declare that they thoroughly enjoyed their visit. The Sirdar is greatly amused at the rumour of his escape, and remarked laughingly that he is no fool.

RAJGHAT, on the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, has been the scene of lively proceedings. A body of twenty or thirty dacoits made an attack upon the quarters occupied by the signallers, booking clerks, and menials, and made off with considerable loot after a smart engagement with the unfortunate employés of the company. The gang also endeavoured to pillage the station itself; but the presence of a number of passengers, who were promptly armed by the station-master with office rulers and ledgers, made them think better of it, and they dissembled. It appears that there are very few police about Rajghat, and that the regular mails and canal dâk mails have been plundered half-a-dozen times within a very short period.

HEAVY rain in the Trans-Indus hills has again breached the Hurnai Railway. Some 68 miles of line between Spintangi and Kuch have been closed for through traffic, but a special trolly service has been arranged for the mails.

SIR A. RENDEL'S opinion regarding the stability of the Sukkur Bridge is that the bracing of the bottom boom is insufficient, and additional bracing has accordingly been designed weighing 34 tons, and costing only £689, which can be easily adjusted without impeding the use of the bridge by trains.

THE Delhi-Kalka Railway management have obtained the permission of the Superintendent of the Government Prison at Umballa to utilise the services of four hundred prisoners to work on the line, owing to the failure of some of their contractors.

A FIRE occurred at Viceregal Lodge, Simla, on August

14th. It originated in the bakery chimney, some sparks passing through the cracks in the masonry, and setting fire to beams in the loft and spare rooms. The fire was discovered at eight o'clock, and hose was promptly laid on, and the flames got under; but not before a part of the floor and roof had been burned. Had the fire occurred late at night the consequences might have been serious.

MR. BAINES, C.S., of Bombay, has reached Simla, and commenced work as Census Commissioner.

THE death from typhoid fever has occurred at Mussoorie of Mr. McNair, of the Survey of India. Mr. McNair was an intrepid explorer, and undertook a few years ago a journey through Kafiristan, travelling in disguise. The enterprise was at that time one of very great danger; but after some narrow escapes Mr. McNair got back to give the public an interesting account of his adventures, and the Government some valuable information.

MAJOR HARVEY, Commissariat Department, died at Myingyan August 17th.

NOTES.

A REUTER'S telegram from Simla dated Sept. 7th states that an important despatch had been received there from Major-General Sir G. S. White, commanding the force in Upper Burma, on the state of affairs in that country. After speaking in the highest terms of the conduct of the troops, both British and Native, the despatch states that under the energetic administration of Sir C. Crosthwaite, the British hold on the country has been firmly established. There is increased security for life and property, and the material prosperity of the country has been advanced, soldiers and civilians both having worked heartily for the benefit of the people. Sir G. White regrets the systematic misrepresentation which he declares nearly every act of the local administration has undergone. Sir Frederick Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief, fully concurs with Sir G. White.

THE Times correspondents at Calcutta and Rangoon have little to wire about this week. The news sent by the former is chiefly concerning Bombay. The Duke of Connaught had opened the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition at Poona on Wednesday last, and in his speech regretted that this was the last time that he would be present at such a ceremony in India.

Tantia Bheel, the bold Robin Hood of the Central Provinces, has made a full confession. Like the admirable highwaymen of Mr. Harrison Ainsworth's novels, he had never killed anybody himself, but had robbed the rich to help the poor. Last year he distributed Rs.6,000 among the poor on the banks of the Nerbudda. Although he acknowledges to have cut off the noses of policemen and women who were troublesome to him, he has been put himself to considerable inconveniences. He has suffered lately from want of food and from malaria. Mr. Bradlaugh should bring his wrongs before Parliament when it meets; or, failing this, Mr. McDougall might get up a petition on his behalf. It will be a pity if so interesting a criminal should be hanged by some bloodthirsty English judge in India without the chance of an appeal to the "great jury" of English sentimentalists.

A largely-attended Hindu meeting has been held at Poona to express sympathy with the corrupt Bombay officials, and to convey approval of Lord Reay's conduct in maintaining them in office. This must be gratifying to Lord Reay, but it will give him some insight into a certain phase of Hindu character. The Times correspondent thinks that such sympathies are based on "a low ethical platform," but this opinion will not be endorsed by the sympathisers nor by the Native editors of the Indian press.

THE mercantile community of Calcutta strongly supports the scheme for a second line of railway communication between Calcutta and Northern India, independent of the East India Railway. Both official and mercantile opinion is expressed that further strengthening of the East India Railway monopoly would have a very sinister influence in discouraging the largely increasing trade with the northern provinces.

THE Government of India have sanctioned a deputation of two executive engineers to make a survey of the Shan States during the coming cold season, and to report on the practicability and advisability of constructing a railway to the Salwan frontier. Active operations on the Moo Valley Railway, which will be eventually prolonged to Bhamo, will commence in October.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR GEORGE WHITE'S reports on the operations in Burma show that from May 1st, 1887, to March 31st of this year 6 British and 2 Native officers, 10 British and 42 Native soldiers were killed; and 6 British and 4 Native officers, and 35 British and 97 Native soldiers wounded in action. Since 1885 over 6,000 men have been invalided.

THE news by Overland Mail is barren enough. The Governments on the hills are preparing to descend, and wend their different ways on winter tour. But in the meantime the official sojourners in high places are making merry with masque and play, and all manner of amusements—the merrier as the time gets shorter for the exodus downwards—the too facilis descensus to the Avernus of the Plains.

A LUMINARY of the Church in India has been casting a stone at the gods on Olympus. He has stated his ecclesiastical opinion that "the angels weep over the frivolity of Simla." Upon this one of "our own" correspondents at that Paradise writes saying that the angels must have dried their tears, as "there has been quite a lull in our ordinary round of dissipation." The "lull" had lasted for nearly a fortnight, "the only exception to the general quietude being the performance of The Yeomen of the Guard, which is now having a most successful run of five nights, all the seats being taken for each occasion." This correspondent adds: "The matrimonial market has so far been an unusually good one." This may or may not be the cause of angels' tears, but Simla is not likely to take part in any sorrow but that which necessitates a return to duty and work in the plains.

THE Ameer of Afghanistan would appear to have as holy a horror of newspaper criticism as a City of London Company promoter. He positively hates the press. The Civil and Military Gazette says that his reason for doing so is that to the newspapers he attributes all the evils that can befall a country. So hostile indeed is he to the introduction merely of a newspaper into Afghanistan that he lays a tax of Rs. 5 on every copy that enters the country; and it is only when concealed in some English packet brought by kafila from India that the English employés at Cabul are able to obtain an English newspaper without paying the exorbitant fine imposed. A paper that costs Rs. 5-4 a day plus postage would be probably the dearest extant.

THAT His Highness should be opposed to press publicity is also more than probable if the following, culled from an Indian paper, be true:—"An Afghan correspondent sends a weird story of the Ameer's vengeance on his rebel prisoners. It appears that 300 prisoners under the charge of Jan Mohamad Khan, Khazanchi, have arrived from Turkistan at Cabul. Three of these are put to death each day. One is hanged in yellow or green apparel; one is dressed in black and blown from a gun; and the third, who is put to death by the sword, is given red clothes. The executions will, we suppose, last 100 days." Of course this story must not be accepted as certain fact, but Afghan rulers have always had a way of treating their enemies—about which an Afghan ruler would naturally be of opinion that the less said the better.

A BOMBAY contemporary, commenting on Sir Edward Watkin's suggestion of a Bureau for the development of Indian commerce says :—"Here are in India coal-mines of enormous extent which are still virgin, iron-mines which are known to exist, but have never been worked, copper, tin, lead, petroleum, gold, silver, and diamonds only awaiting the open sesame of commerce, and rich agricultural tracts which only lie idle, because no Bureau has yet come into existence to devise means of transit to and from. It has been nobody's business in particular to do any of these things up to the present time, and accordingly it has not been done." Will no "honest" promoter of limited liability come to the rescue?

THE Indian trooping relief season 1889-90 opened on Wednesday with the departure from Portsmouth of H.M. Indian troopship Malabar for Bombay, with drafts numbering forty-one officers, sixteen ladies, and eleven children; nine warrant officers, six wives, and seven children; and 1,174 men, thirty-six women, and forty-three children. The next vessel is the Crocodile, which sails on the 18th inst.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 1.

At the last meeting of the Legislative Council at Simla there was introduced a Bill to amend the Acts relating to the Official Trustee's office and the office of the Administrator-General of Bengal. Whenever a vacancy occurred it was proposed to amalgamate the Official Trustee's office with the Administrator-General's office, and to split up the present jurisdiction by creating three new centres at Allahabad, Lahore, and Rangoon. A Bill was also introduced to amend the recent Merchandise Marks Act by giving local governments power to extend the time during which piece goods on which the length is not stamped may be imported from the 1st of August to any date not later than the 1st of November. All the Chambers of Commerce have urged the amendment save that of Bombay. Certain Native dealers have been prosecuted and convicted at Cawnpore under the Merchandise Marks Act for selling Native-dyed grey cottons as European manufactured Turkey red cloth. As this was the first conviction under the Act the magistrate gave a lenient sentence, each of the accused being fined Rs. 200.

The Simla Fine Arts Exhibition was opened by the Viceroy on Thursday. In the course of his address he said the society had now reached its twenty-first year. In spite of the warning words they had heard he could not believe such a society in such a place as Simla was in danger of succumbing from inanition. It was certain to receive large and influential support so long as the Government of India spent a certain part of the year more or less in Simla, and turned a deaf ear to the voice of wooers who so persistently assured it that "love is of the valley," or, he should say, of the plains, and that it should lose no time in coming down from "yonder mountain height." Public taste was generally pretty accurate in judging the work of artists, and what it required was fidelity to nature. A friend of his in Canada once painted a picture of a boat and two Indians, but as the Indians were clothed in grey homespun, he painted them each with a red shirt. He then called one of the Indians and asked him if he liked the picture. The man, pointing to the shirt, said it was "a —— lie." True art avoided both extremes.

A crowded meeting of Parsees was held in Bombay last Sunday to protest against imputations directed against the Parsee community in the police report published by the Government in connection with the Crawford case. There were 5,000 present, and Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy presided. The meeting, after recording its appreciation of the Government's motive in the Crawford inquiry, and of Lord Reay's confidence in the Parsees, passed the following resolution :—

"This meeting is of opinion that the imputations made by Mr. Ommaney against the whole Parsee community are entirely unfounded and contrary to truth in every respect, and expresses its strong and firm repudiation of those imputations, regretting that they should have been recklessly made against a whole community by a responsible officer of the Government, and in an official document which had been published to the whole British Empire."

It is stated that only twelve of the corrupt Bombay Native officials will be dismissed. The Bombay Times, in commenting upon the proposed indemnity Act, urges that there is no constitutional precedent for passing an Act of indemnity for the purpose of granting immunity of office to corrupt officials, and pointing out that such Acts are usually passed to protect illegal action during a real or threatened rebellion when the ordinary laws are invalidated. The writer continues :—

"The public will await with interest the objects and reasons for so extraordinary a measure. It is difficult to imagine any circumstance arising during the Poonah season with which the ordinary law is unable to cope. If the officials who have bought their offices are to be retained by special legislation for Bombay, why should not the principle be extended to the other Presidencies and the law be made perpetual? The Secretary of State's recorded expression of confidence in the Bombay Administration is hardly accepted in Calcutta as justified by results. Lord Reay's successor ought to be a man of very exceptional administrative ability to extricate Bombay from the serious consequences of impulsive and ill-considered executive action."

The case against the high priest of the Tripati temple is proceeding. The priest is charged before the district magistrate in North Arcot, in the Madras Presidency, with having misappropriated the temple treasure in the form of gold coins valued at Rx.170,000. The solid masonry will have to be removed to enable the necessary excavations to be made to test the truth of the charges.

The last report on the condition of Ganjam says that prices are stationary and the rainfall is general. The number of persons engaged on large works is 7,853; on small works, 2,734; 65,350 persons are receiving gratuitous relief, of whom 9,000 are men, 15,400 women, and the rest children. The further decrease on the numbers of the previous week of 12,650 is due to closer scrutiny. There are recorded 170 deaths from cholera.

A memorial numerously signed has been sent in to the Government protesting against the Indian mail being despatched from Bombay on Sunday.

The Graduates' Association of Bombay has addressed a memorial to the Registrar of the University, representing the present system of selection of examiners as unsatisfactory and unsystematic.

A grand State ball was given by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at Poonah on Thursday, and 600 guests were invited. The Duke and Duchess are both very popular in India, and will be greatly missed upon their departure next March. They will return to England by China, Japan, and Canada.

Prince Albert Victor arrives in Bombay on Nov. 9, proceeding direct to Poonah. He thence visits Hyderabad, Travancore, Mysore, and Bangalore, and embarks from Madras for Calcutta in time for Christmas week. He subsequently visits Benares, Agra, and Cawnpore, and will then attend the cavalry camp at Muriki. After the manœuvres he will visit Rawul Pindi, Peshawur, and various Rajpoot States, closing his tour with Baroda. He will leave for England in March.

A new Rukhmabai case is exciting great interest among the Natives in the Western Presidency. A girl aged fourteen has been sent to gaol for refusing to join her husband.

The Punjab Budget for 1889-90 discloses an estimated deficit of Rx. 550,000, chiefly occasioned by the increased grant for public works.
